Janet Good is good friends with Dr. Jack Kevorkian. She supports his cause and says she may someday call on him to help her die.

A Good life

Janet Good is ready for the day she places the call to Dr. Jack Kevorkian. When it's her time, she knows her family will agree. Her friends will understand. And the famous suicide doctor, she is sure, won't hesitate to help ease her out of a life that has been largely satisfying.

Probe her all you will; nowhere in this calm, kindly grandmother is there any doubt that, if she needs to, she would summon Kevorkian to her bedside.

"I've felt his wrath. I know his idiosyncrasies," she said. "The one word that describes him best is 'trustworthy.'"

The story of Good and Kevorkian comes at an unusual time in the saga of the once-obscure Michigan pathologist who has become a household name for his involvement in the deaths of 27 patients.

Pivotal trials begin next week in Oakland County, and the doctor's attorney said that, in essence, Kevorkian will be on trial, once again, for his life.

Simulcast racing: It's a horse of a different color

By Gene Schabath
Journal Staff Writer

Simulcast racing has turned out to be a $1-million idea for Michigan, the horse racing industry and its long-suffering horse racing fans.

The million dollars is how much racing fans wagered during the first two days of the historic simulcast venture, which debuted last week at Ladbroke Detroit Race Course in Livonia.

And industry sources say the $1 million handle could be reached in one day alone this weekend at DRC.

One reason DRC had such phenomenal early success is it's the only track of eight in Michigan to take advantage of the law, which went into effect Jan. 1. The law allows tracks to simulcast horse races year-round.

State Racing Commissioner Nelson Westrin said other tracks, such as Hazel Park and Northville Downs, could be simulcasting as early as this weekend.

"It's been a tremendous success. It's astounding," Westrin said of the early success. "They've been wagering close to $600,000 (for each of the first two days) and that's way beyond their projections. They were anticipating $80,000 a day."

update

A crowd of 2,420 on Tuesday wagered $548,104 and a crowd of 2,132 on Wednesday bet $555,104. Thursday's attendance of 2,244 bet $562,870.

DRC has been simulcasting races live from Aqueduct, Gulfstream, Tampa Bay, Laurel Park, The Fairgrounds, Turf Paradise and Oaklawn. It also simulcasts harness racing from the Meadows, Pompano Park, Meadowlands and Balmoral.

"It was a happy crowd, a contented, satisfied crowd," Westrin said. "It was like (they were saying), finally something was there they wanted to see. It kind of provided evidence that this is a major racing market that still has not been tapped. It bodes well for the industry."

Westrin said simulcasting could be the salvation for the horse racing industry, which was on the brink of going out of business because of the proliferation of casinos in Michigan and Windsor. Simulcasting is also done at Windsor Raceway.

Simulcasting could bring in as much as $300 million a year to Michigan, and Westrin said some experts see purses increasing by as much as 77 percent.

"We're pretty ecstatic," said DRC spokesman Sam McKee. "It's like having a baby. It's a real pain but once you have it it's the greatest feeling in the world. The fans are tickled to death."

Safety rules changes could harm workers

By Eric Freedman
Journal Lansing Bureau

LANSING — Changes in state and federal job safety laws could jeopardize workers, critics warn, but advocates of change say the inspection system must be streamlined to focus on serious hazards.

Some state legislators have suggested curtailing Michigan's occupational safety and health program, and union officials fear the Engler administration is moving in that direction.

And on the federal level, the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee is considering a bill to reduce U.S. Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) penalties for paperwork infractions and minor violations. The measure also would encourage better voluntary compliance by employers, sponsors say.

Developments last week in two high-profile Michigan worker safety cases highlight the issue:

■ American Bumper & Manufacturing Co. of Ionia was convicted of involuntary manslaughter in the 1991 on-the-job deaths of Ricky Dora, 22, and Steven Eilar, 23. The men were crushed in the press they were operating, and the state Labor Department cited the company for more than 200 safety violations.

American Bumper pleaded no contest to the charges and faces combined criminal and civil fines of $100,000. A no-contest plea has the same effect as a guilty plea. The company also faces civil penalties of up to $1 million for other safety violations unrelated to the deaths.

During the court session, about 20 grieving relatives wore T-shirts and arm bands proclaiming "Press for Justice" for the two victims. They protested that the company got off too easily.

"Everyone is heartsick," said Lisa Eilar, Steven Eilar's sister. "Our family has no feeling of justice. A thick pocketbook can buy your way out of everything, including murder."

Once-failing student uncovers a Rich heritage

Once you get to know him, it comes as no surprise that Dale Rich spends his free time searching out African-American historical figures who faced down society's scorn and became heroes in the process.

The Detroit-born historian has brought to life people like John Roy Lynch and Elizabeth Freeman. A 19th-century lawmaker, Lynch learned to read by standing in an alley and looking through the window of an all-white classroom. Freeman was a slave whose fight for freedom led to the abolition of slavery in Massachusetts.

Rich is drawn to those kinds of folks. Some would say it's because he, too, defied a system that marks young black men for failure.

By the time Rich reached the seventh grade, he had made up his mind to quit school. He had already failed two semesters, and he was a year behind the other kids. "One teacher failed me in the 3A; her sister failed me in the 4B," he said. "My self-esteem was about .5." He stayed up late, dozed through his classes and gave up on school and himself.

"I was a year behind; everyone's teasing me," Rich recalled. "My friends are gone and people are calling me 'the professor' because I have these glasses." Without the glasses, he could barely see two inches in front of him. "I knew I could do the work, but I didn't care anymore," he said.

Then, in the seventh grade he took a printing class. It changed his life. When Rich talks about that class, his words tumble over each other in a rush to be heard: "I enjoyed it; I had the bug. The teacher told us that if we excelled in printing, we could take a higher level of classes at Cass Tech and from there we could get a job with the printers' union. That was the way I wanted to go."

Don't expect a happy ending yet. He flunked part of the seventh grade, and he never graduated from Cass. He was a 20-year-old senior when Uncle Sam drafted him. "I could have gotten out of it, but I didn't," he said. Stationed at Ft. Myer, Va., he earned his GED and enrolled in a college class on American history since 1865.

When the professor asked the names of two black people, other than George Washington Carver and Booker T. Washington, who had contributed to American society, Rich drew a blank. "I told myself that would never happen again." That was 1970.

Over the years, he took more classes and discovered a talent for research. "After while, I found myself going to the library even when I didn't have a class. That was unheard of for me," he laughed.

Today, Rich has earned national recognition for his research. He talks to schoolchildren about African-American history; his exhibits on black military history and African-American women have been shown at Detroit's public libraries, and he researches documentaries on black Americans who left their mark on history.

That young black kid who wanted to quit school because he felt cut off from the American dream. He hopes his research will help other black youngsters appreciate themselves and realize "what you can do when you put your mind to it."

By the way, Rich eventually became a pressman. These days he's on strike with the rest of us.

Patients refute state tally of Lyme disease cases

By James A. McClear
Journal Staff Writer

A sesame-seed size tick is causing a giant controversy in Michigan, where health authorities and victims are at odds about the prevalence of Lyme disease.

According to Dr. William Hall, chief of the disease surveillance section of the state Department of Health, much ado is being made about an illness that's chiefly been confined to one western section of the Upper Peninsula.

But others, including doctors who have treated people with the disease, said Lyme disease is now in lower Michigan as well and is reaching proportions second only to the AIDS virus.

Hall said that fewer than 500 people have been diagnosed with Lyme disease in Michigan since 1990.

With the exception of two cases in lower Michigan, the rest were centered in the Upper Peninsula, chiefly in Menominee County. Hall said that many of the cases were reported prior to tests being standardized in 1995.

"We do have Lyme disease in Michigan, and it's clearly endemic in the southern part of Menominee County, but in lower Michigan, we just have not found much evidence of the disease," said Hall.

But 38 cases have been reported in Oakland County since 1990, even though medical authorities are at odds over whether even those are truly Lyme disease or some other malady that masks itself with similar symptoms.

Dr. John J. Gordon, Oakland County Health director, cautions that the diagnoses of some doctors are loosely defined and may turn out to be something else when applied to standard case definitions.

One prominent victim of the disease is Rob Kress, former weatherman for WXYZ-TV (Channel 7), who remains stricken with the disease.

Another is Mary Patterson, whose father, Oakland County Executive L. Brooks Patterson, has launched his own crusade to help identify the problem.

LYME DISEASE

A bacterial disease transmitted by the deer tick— first recognized in the northeastern United States (named for Lyme, Conn.). It is now known to occur in Midwestern and Western states as well as in many other countries. Deer ticks infest animals such as deer, mice and birds.

How To Avoid LYME DISEASE

May through October is the greatest period of the year to become infected because temperatures are likely to be above 45 degrees F., when infected ticks are active.

- While walking in wooded areas, wear long sleeves and pants; tuck pant legs into socks.
- Body and clothing should be checked often while walking in wooded areas. Ticks are most often found where clothing meets skin, under arms or joints and groin areas.
- Shower and check clothing and body for ticks daily.
- Insecticides and repellents (directions should be followed carefully).

SYMPTOMS

When humans are bitten, the bacteria spirochete Borrelia burgdorferi enters the bloodstream.

- A painless rash may appear within a month, often accompanied by severe headaches, fatigue, chills, and fever.
- In the next few months, severe inflammation of the heart muscle or nervous system may occur, causing heart problems, meningitis, and severe migratory pains.
- Sometimes, neither of these stages is observed. If untreated, within two years, chronic arthritic attacks may develop.
- It has recently been discovered that humans may have a genetic predisposition that increases their susceptibility to chronic arthritis. If used in the early stages of the disease, prescribed antibiotics are effective treatments.

Diagnosis of daughter's Lyme disease took nine months

By James A. McClear
Journal Staff Writer

Of all the causes championed by Oakland County Executive L. Brooks Patterson, few have had the urgency of the health crisis that nearly robbed him of his 18-year-old daughter, Mary, whose debilitating case of Lyme disease went undiagnosed by six doctors.

Now Patterson's crusade against Lyme disease has reached Lansing. On Monday, Gov. John Engler will be in Oakland County to appoint a committee to establish the criteria necessary to diagnose the disease and address research issues.

An Engler spokesperson said the committee would initiate a three-to Six doctors were unable to diagnose Mary Patterson's illness.

four-month study to determine the prevalence of Lyme disease, look at what's currently being done in research and testing for the disease, and make recommendations to deal with the problem.

And on Feb. 12, Patterson is sponsoring a "Laughing at Lyme" party at Mark Ridley's Comedy Castle in Royal Oak to raise money for research.

How Mary Patterson became infected with Lyme disease is still unknown. But Patterson is only too aware of its effects. It sapped energy from the lively teen, robbed her of nearly 30 pounds and reduced her blood pressure to critical levels before proper treatment was secured.

Beyond the bug — the sesame seed-size tick, that carries the Borrelia bacteria — the other culprit may be a breakdown in medical reporting procedures, said Oakland County Health Director Dr. Thomas J. Gordon.

He believes the case definition is so restrictive that it excludes many of those afflicted with the disease.

Patterson said that in nine months he went through six doctors and was on the verge of taking his daughter to the Mayo Clinic when a friend suggested he see an infectious-disease specialist, who confirmed the diagnosis.

"I was desperate as a father because I could see before my very eyes that I was losing my little girl," he said.

Her symptoms were similar to the flu, with fatigue, headaches and stiff-support group leader for Oakland, Macomb and St. Clair county residents who have Lyme disease, said the ailment is statewide.

She said 71 people are currently in her group. "It's all over the state," said Purdy. "Ours is only one of 12 support groups throughout Michigan, and many have more than 100 members."

"The state maintains it's not a problem. They don't want to believe it's in lower Michigan. There's a lack of education and public awareness," she said.

"If doctors were better educated and more aware of the problem, I would have been diagnosed much sooner," she said.

Purdy said she had the disease for four years and saw 30 doctors before she was diagnosed.

"It's a controversial issue. It's like the plague," said Purdy. "I think the state's reluctance to define the issue is because they are afraid of what it will do to the tourist industry."

Pat Masserant, a spokeswoman for Gov. John Engler, denies that the state is trying to hide the problem to protect tourism.

"Absolutely not," she said. "The goal of the health department is to protect the people. Allegations that we are not meeting those goals is a real stretch of the imagination. We would want to make sure that the disease is under control."

Hall said part of the problem is trying to determine whether these several hundred cases are truly Lyme disease. "With the new testing technology, I think we have a potential solution."

Hall said most of his pessimism about Oakland's statistics are based on studies that suggest that the southern part of the state is not included in the tick's range.

"I would suggest that the health department quit spending money looking for ticks and concentrate on people," said Dr. Alan Markowitz of Keego Harbor, the first physician to diagnose Mary Patterson's illness.

Markowitz, who says he's treated 40 cases of Lyme disease, says he's reported only three of them to state health authorities because those were the only ones that fit the current guidelines.

"It's a little like saying that rich people drive only Lexus automobiles," said Markowitz. "That still leaves a lot of wealthy folks who are driving around in other automobiles."

The period of greatest risk of becoming infected is May through October. Lyme disease spreads through the bite of the deer tick. A tick, which acquires its infection during an immature feeding age, is able to transmit the infection when it matures and feeds.

From blood samples, the state currently uses what is called an enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay test to identify markers in the blood from chemical residue that the disease leaves. If there's a hint of Lyme disease, more specific testing is done.

According to Thomas Skinner of the National Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta, about 80,000 cases of Lyme disease have been reported nationally since the early 1980s. Michigan has reported 450 cases, he said.

Lyme disease is now the most frequently transmitted tick disease in the country.

Although almost all states reported cases of Lyme disease, more than 85 percent of the cases were reported from the New England, mid-Atlantic and south Atlantic regions, according to health authorities.

PATTERSON, from previous page

ness in her muscles and joints. The tick bite, Patterson said, could have occurred anywhere, including the lakefront adjacent to the family home in Waterford Township.

Treatment, which included a powerful antibiotic and several vitamins to help her regain some of her weight, has allowed her to begin classes at Central Michigan University.

Fear still lurks, however, that she might suffer a recurrence. A persistent illness may linger for months to years and usually involves the musculoskeletal and neurologic systems. Had the disease been caught and diagnosed at its outset, said Patterson, the results may not have been so severe.

"I'm not trying to lay blame on anybody, certainly not the medical profession to whom we have turned for help in this very close call with my daughter's health and future well-being," said Patterson.

"The answer to the question, as far as I can determine, is that the tests for Lyme disease are not scientifically exact, and while my daughter and others may be treated for Lyme disease, medical professionals are reluctant to report that diagnosis unless there's a positive, scientific test that confirms, with preciseness, their diagnosis."

Patterson said he's also concerned over the lack of training by some doctors to diagnose and treat the ailment adequately.

Right-to-die advocate battles terminal cancer

But the relationship between Good and Kevorkian shows that little is predictable in the twists and turns of the debate over whether doctors should help their patients die peacefully.

Good, an advocate of the right to die, vows to beat the odds and live longer than the year she was given. And Kevorkian, who has railed for hours against the excesses of life-prolonging medical technocrats, wants her to try the available treatment — even chemotherapy — to try to live longer.

"She's a courageous, enlightened woman," Kevorkian said in a brief interview with The Sunday Journal. "She's tough, too. I like that."

The two are dear friends. Good, a third-generation Detroit native, has spent most of her free time crusading against poverty and for causes involving civil rights and women's rights.

A Republican who now lives in Farmington Hills, Good, 72, also describes herself as a "recovering Catholic." She enjoys matching wits with church officials. For instance, of the seven sacraments of the Catholic Church, women are not eligible for one of them, ordination, though Good believes they should be.

"So I'll tell them: 'I've had all six sacraments.' The dumb ones say: 'No, you mean seven.'"

Seven years ago, she set up a Michigan chapter of the national right-to-die Hemlock Society. That's how she met Kevorkian, and has faithfully remained an unwavering supporter.

"I've been a civil rights worker all my life, and started out early. I was in the war on poverty. Women's rights. All of it," she said.

"I believe this (the right to die) is the ultimate civil right."

And she believes it's her right, too, one she would have hoped she wouldn't need to exercise.

But in August 1995, Good found out she is terminally ill. A cancerous tumor had grown in her pancreas. It protruded into her liver, where it blocked the production and flow of bile. With nowhere to go, the bile began to back up, soon rising out of her body through every layer of her tissue and, eventually, her skin.

"I was itching," she said. "That was my only symptom. But it wasn't like itching from mosquitoes. I mean I was digging into my flesh. I had huge sores."

The bile caused the itching. And, as with many incurable forms of cancer, the appearance of the symptom meant it was probably too late.

Since 1989, Good has counseled and consoled the dying. For some, she arranged introductions to Kevorkian. For others, she described ways to stockpile life-giving medicines until, taken all at once, they could be used to induce death.

"I know a lot about how it's done," she said with a knowing look.

As a founder of Hemlock in Michigan, Good also has been sought out by researchers and reporters with questions about dying people who turn to Kevorkian.

"All of a sudden, I became that terminally ill person the reporters had been looking for," she said.

But she initially lacked an answer. When she was initially diagnosed as having incurable cancer, she realized her medicine cabinet was bare. "I didn't have that stash," she said. "Without a stash, I didn't have a choice. The religious right and their followers don't want people to have that choice. I was angry. 'Choice is the most important thing.'"

Through the years, Kevorkian has stood before approximately 50 judges, from district court magistrates to judges of the Michigan Supreme Court. Through most of the hearings, Good has taken a seat in the audience, providing quiet, steady and brainy support.

In the early months of her illness,

A TRIBUTE TO JANET GOOD is being organized by her friends. The "lighthearted evening of fun and friendship — no tears or mawkishness, please" — will be Feb. 25 at the Peking House Restaurant in Royal Oak. For information, call the restaurant at 810-545-2700.

she didn't want to be the cause of sending Kevorkian, her friend, to stand before more judges.

"I thought I wouldn't ask my friend, I wouldn't want to be the one to send him to jail for good," she said.

But life has been complicated and, in many ways, sad for Good and her family. Her husband, Ray, underwent surgery in December to correct heart problems and steel himself for the day he would have to actively care for Janet.

She took him home Christmas Eve. While he rested at home, Janet Good went to visit her daughter, Donna Rae, and her children. A bronchitis sufferer, Donna Rae was constantly troubled by the prospect of losing her mother to cancer. She made a three-hour video celebrating the family.

"This terrible disease has been harder on my family than on me," Janet Good said. "It's driving them nuts."

While opening presents, her daughter cried out for help and said she couldn't breathe. An ambulance came, but Donna died on the way to the hospital.

"Her death is the overwhelming thing in my life," Good said.

She goes on, though, for her six grandchildren, her husband and her surviving son and daughter. Friends marvel at her strength.

"She's a very strong person, and I see her as a visionary," said Judy Coats, who has known Good for seven years through the Hemlock Society, where Coats works.

"She's like your mother. She's always right."

Detroit attorney Carole Chiamp has known Good for years through the Michigan Women's Campaign Fund, which honors local women and raises money for women seeking public office.

"People in any of the groups in which Janet is involved will tell you the same thing," Chiamp said. "She's actively involved in everything you and I care about and she never does anything halfway."

As the months went on, Good began changing her thinking about how the end will come. "Now I think, we've been friends for so long," Good said of Kevorkian. "Why shouldn't we be together at the end?"

Still, Good believes that on her own, she will live longer than the time allotted by doctors. In August, they gave her six months to a year. This month marks the first benchmark, and she looks and feels fine.

She beat one set of odds last summer, when she underwent the 9-1/2 hour surgery for pancreatic cancer.

"The odds of surviving the surgery are about 15 percent," she said. "Very low. It's the worst cancer you can get. They told my daughter that if I did survive, my mind might not be right."

While she was recovering in William Beaumont Hospital in Royal Oak, visitors came and went. One of them, on a September day, was Jack Kevorkian.

The sight of Kevorkian near a cancer ward was enough to stir security guards, who greeted him but then watched as he made his way to Good's bedside and read her chart while an audience of hospital staffers looked on.

"He's a terrific punster and he had the whole room in stitches," she said.

To this day, Good has refused chemotherapy. The cancer has begun to move into her liver, and the symptoms near the end could include severe pain and nausea.

"I don't expect that for a year or more," she said.

Meanwhile, she still refuses chemotherapy, to Kevorkian's disappointment.

"He told me: 'Janet, miracles happen. Sometimes they give you one jolt of that stuff and it knocks it all out.'"

She hopes for a miracle, but not through radiation therapy. The miracle she wants is surviving the cancer on her own.

While Good waits to see if she does, she remains active. A fun-hearted tribute for her is scheduled for Feb. 25 in Royal Oak, and she continues to counsel and console the terminally ill. She spends time on her computer, keeping tabs on people — friends — across the country.

At least with the illness, Good is at peace. And if the time comes, and Good needs to slip away, she plans to do it with the calm and peace she sought in life.

"I have the option of asking the good doctor," she said. "And I know he won't turn me down."

A wonderful life

Woman says honesty helped her live to be 100

By Bill Halls
Journal Staff Writer

Honesty is as good as any excuse to live to be 100.

"I did domestic work, restaurants, all the work that was honest," said Bernice Harrison, who celebrated her 100th birthday on Wednesday. "If you get as old as me, and do as good as me ... you'll do all right. I still get up and dress myself. Someone has to bathe my back. But I do everything else."

Miss Harrison, who greatly enjoyed her ice cream and cake party at Law Den Nursing Home on Webb and Woodrow Wilson in Detroit, was born in 1896 in Chicago. Her family moved to Milwaukee and then Detroit before she was 10. She spent the rest of her life in the Motor City, working at any job available. Her last job was as an apartment building manager when she was 85.

"Once I racked balls at the Recreation Building (a famous 10-story pool hall in Detroit)," said Miss Harrison, who never married. "I remember the streetcar cost 10 cents."

"You did what you had to do. I'm 100 years old and have had a wonderful life."

On hand for Miss Harrison's birthday were her 73-year-old nephew, William Wesley Smith; William's sister, and Miss Harrison's niece, Ruth Smith Anderson, and great-nephew William Bernard Smith.

"Age 94 seems to be a median in our family," said Anderson.

So be it.

Elections director may quit after suspension

By Roger Chesley
Journal Staff Writer

Eddie L. Wilson, Detroit's election director, said Friday that he may resign after he finishes serving a three-day suspension that ends this week.

"I've worked 27 years for the city, and I feel politics is forcing me out," said Wilson, 48. "... I have to protect my pension now. The clerk is already out there telling people I should be fired."

Wilson and City Clerk Jackie Currie have been feuding since Currie took office in January 1994. Wilson is a civil service employee and Currie is an elected official; they have battled over who runs elections.

Wilson made the comments to The Detroit Sunday Journal after discussing the recent events: On Jan. 30, the Detroit City Election Commission suspended Wilson for a letter dated January 1996 that he sent to a potential 125,000-150,000 absentee voters age 60 and older for the March 19 election.

The commissioners — Currie, Council President Maryann Mahaffey and Corporation Counsel Phyllis James — were especially concerned about this paragraph: "However, before sending your request, please be advised that the names of candidates for the Democratic Party may not appear on the ballot. This cannot be confirmed until January 12, 1996. If you choose not to participate in this election, you will still be mailed applications for the August and November elections scheduled in 1996."

The commissioners felt the comments suggested voters shouldn't cast ballots March 19. "The commissioners thought it was a serious poor judgment call on his part," said Vernon Allen, Currie's deputy. Allen said that Wilson didn't mention two Tiger Stadium ballot proposals or a library proposal.

"This election ... is not about Mr. Wilson or Ms. Currie. All of the citizens should have an opportunity to vote," said Currie, who was interviewed before Wilson's comments Friday. She said it will cost $60,000 to send out revised letters.

But Wilson said he had to prepare letters before it was decided to put the proposals on the ballot. He said he had to start the process 90 days before the election because the law allows voters to request the ballot 75 days before the election, and it takes 15-20 days for the printing company to prepare, process and insert the letters.

"It's possible I might not return," said Wilson, who earns $74,000 annually.

Rules may hurt workers

tunnel. Six employees were injured.

The Michigan Occupational Safety and Health Administration cited Jay Dee for 15 violations. Agency supervisor Manny Veliz said the explosion could have been prevented if employees had proper training to monitor equipment and identify potential hazards. The company is expected to appeal, he said.

Attorney General Frank Kelley said, "Congress and the Legislature should remember that tragedies occur when employers fail to carry out safety rules and regulations now on the books.

"These two deaths should lead our representatives to consider raising, instead of lowering, workplace safety standards and the civil and criminal penalties imposed when those standards are not met."

Lisa Eilar said Kelley's office should have been more aggressive in the American Bumper case.

In Lansing, AFL-CIO legislative director Tim Hughes expressed concern about the potential impact of Gov. John Engler's new executive order shifting Michigan OSHA enforcement out of the Labor Department and into a restructured Commerce Department. The department would be renamed Consumer and Industry Services and would also take over public health inspection of hospitals and nursing homes.

"The ongoing attitude in the Engler administration is that the less regulation, the better," Hughes said. "The general attitude of Commerce is not to enforce many standards vigorously."

But acting Commerce Director Kathy Wilbur said the intention of the reorganization "is to provide better customer service, to do it better and to do it faster."

Meanwhile, a state Senate committee is considering a House-passed bill to shield employers from OSHA fines when a worker deliberately refuses to use safety equipment or obey safety instructions.

"I don't view it as a weakening" of the law, said Deputy Labor Director Kal Smith. The AFL-CIO does not oppose the proposal, which is backed by the Michigan Chamber of Commerce, National Federation of Independent Businesses, and Michigan Manufacturers Association. It is sponsored by Rep. Walter DeLange, R-Grand Rapids.

Strike's duration, cost surprise papers, Ridder admits

By John Lippert
Journal Staff Writer

Executives at the Detroit Free Press and News didn't expect the strike to last 6-1/2 months, as it has. They didn't expect the unions' advertising boycott to be so effective. They didn't expect the UAW and others to be so supportive of 2,100 union workers the companies are trying to replace.

That's what P. Anthony Ridder told Wall Street analysts in a conference

the newspaper strike

call Thursday. Ridder is board chairman of Knight-Ridder Inc., owner of the Free Press.

Ridder said he plans to keep his replacement workers, saying they show bravery in defying union pickets. Meaningful talks are impossible, he said, unless unions jettison their "featherbedding" ways.

He promised analysts the strike will cost the newspapers a combined $50 million in 1996, compared to the $92 million the companies say they lost because of the strike in 1995. That's on top of at least $112 million in for-gone profits for those two years.

Ridder also said the Free Press and News will turn a profit in 1997, a full year later than the newspapers' earlier predictions.

Wall Street is sitting still for Ridder's promises, at least for now.

The stock has been propelled by the bull market on Wall Street to 65-7/8, just below its 52-week high. John Reidy, the influential Smith-Barney analyst, said Friday that the stock is "reasonably valued at $66," meaning he doesn't expect much additional increase.

In 1995, Knight-Ridder earned $160 million, including a $53.6-million one-time gain from the sale of the Journal of Commerce, on revenues of $2.75 billion. That was down from $170.9 million on revenues of $2.65 billion in 1994.

Gannett Co. Inc., which owns the News, is to announce 1995 earnings Monday.

Frank Thompson, a University of Michigan economist who reviewed newspaper finances at the unions' request, said Wednesday that the strike was a management blunder. "When you say it's not about money but about control, you've lost your grip on the way capitalism works, which is by maximizing shareholder value," he said.

Here's why Wall Street is less alarmed than Thompson about the strike:

■ The newspapers did a good job of getting bad news out early. They announced in December that the Detroit strike will cost more and last longer than expected. That's when several analysts downgraded their rating on Knight-Ridder stock.

■ Fear caused by the strike in Detroit, analysts say, helps Knight-Ridder and Gannett muscle workers in other cities. That's already happened, they say, in Philadelphia, where workers approved a contract extension.

■ Investment analysts believe that at a time the Internet is capturing classified ads and other business, newspapers can't tolerate overpaid, underworked workers. Reidy, the Smith Barney analyst, believes unions have imposed enormous featherbedding on Detroit newspapers. When asked how much featherbedding exists, or how much revenue has been lost as the newspapers seek to replace union workers, he said he didn't know. But he said he's sure management is doing the right thing.

Clearly, the unions have failed to convince Reidy, and apparently lots of other people, of a claim accepted by Detroit Mayor Dennis Archer and others: that it's management, and not the unions, that has torpedoed efforts at compromise.

Part of the problem is the overwhelming power of the newspapers to shape public opinion.

Tim Kelleher, a newspaper bargainer, complained in the Free Press on Friday that the Teamsters wanted $71 million in higher pay. What he didn't say — and the newspaper didn't bring up — is that virtually all those demands were withdrawn two months ago, and the newspaper companies have yet to respond.

Clearly, the turnaround promised by Ridder hasn't appeared yet.

The newspapers are printing just 918,000 copies on Sundays, according to internal figures, and hundreds of thousands of them are being scrapped. Combined daily circulation is below 600,000, circulation officials say. That's 500,000 fewer than when the joint operating agreement began in 1989.

Advertising remained depressed through January. Thousands of customers are receiving inaccurate bills because of untrained circulation workers and unstaffed delivery routes. Because of pressure from disgruntled customers, seven workers in the pay-by-mail department have quit since January. They're being replaced by security guards whose jobs were recently eliminated. Experienced circulation workers are betting the guards won't last long.

The damage is so severe, a Wall Street analyst said, that five years will have to pass before anybody can say for sure whether Ridder blundered in allowing the strike to drag on.

Other developments

■ The newspapers denied rumors that Frank Vega, who runs their combined advertising, printing and distribution operations, has been tapped to run Gannett newspapers in Hawaii. The rumors got started, officials said, when Vega was asked to attend a Gannett board meeting in Hawaii this month. The reason for Vega's presence at the meeting was unclear, however. He was stripped of his top policy-making job in Gannett after paying a fine in 1994 because of improper insider stock trading.

■ Resentment is growing at the Free Press about wages. Many longtime workers haven't had an increase in base wages since 1991; many resent earning less than workers recruited during the strike. The Free Press, insiders say, is ready to declare an impasse in Newspaper Guild bargaining on Feb. 13. This would likely lead to the unions filing a new federal complaint of unfair labor practices. But while that issue is contested, it would clear the way for the paper to award raises of 3-4 percent a year, depending on performance reviews. Still unclear, though, is whether management will also impose a $50-a-month charge per family for workers with Blue Cross health insurance.

Educator invites black parents back to school

By Roger Chesley
Journal Staff Writer

Ypsilanti-area educator Joseph Dulin has a class assignment for all African-American parents nationwide come Feb. 12: Go back to school with your kids.

The payoff for the parents, says Dulin, is they'll know more about how the school works and what their kid faces every day in class. But perhaps

black history month

most important, the youths will see that their parents care about their schooling.

Dulin, 60, calls his idea the National African American Parent Involvement Day (NAAPID) "Take Your Child to School/Visit Your Child in School." He said the concept arose from the energy and activism he felt during the Million Man March, and he planned the event for Black History Month.

"This day was conceived to promote a higher standard of education for African-American youngsters," Dulin writes in a letter explaining the event. "So many things are going on that are negative in our African-American communities, maybe this will be a spark."

The march, Dulin said in an interview last week, convinced him the project was vital. "It took me back to what we should be doing," said Dulin, who for 22 years has been the principal of the Roberto Clemente Student Development Center for at-risk youths in the Ann Arbor Public Schools.

Joe Dulin is principal of the Roberto Clemente Student Development Center.

He announced the idea in November, and Dulin decided to take the concept nationwide. He has gotten endorsements or support for the project from the NAACP, National Urban League, National Alliance of Black School Educators and the UAW.

"This man came to us with a great deal of passion for the idea," said Dr. Charlie Knight, president of the black school educators, which has 6,000 members in 100 affiliates nationwide.

"Parents usually drop the kids off in kindergarten and pick them up in Grade 12," she continued. "But kids need computers today, they need to know about the Internet ... and parents of inner-city kids could be left out in the cold."

Dulin is no stranger to innovation or historic firsts.

He grew up in Evansville, Ind., and was one of the first two blacks to graduate from his Catholic high school in 1953. After college, he went to Ft. Madison, Iowa, and was president of the NAACP branch. While there, he stopped "Aunt Jemima," a demeaning caricature for blacks, from hosting a rodeo in the early 1960s.

He came to Detroit in 1964, where he had relatives. By 1967, he was principal of St. Martin de Porres and the first African-American layman in the nation to head a Catholic school. After the Detroit archdiocese threatened to close the school in 1970, he retaliated by padlocking Detroit churches. The archdiocese backed down, but it slashed St. Martin's support from $228,000 to $100,000 per year.

Dulin resigned as principal in 1972, but he was tapped to lead the new alternative school in 1974 near Ann Arbor, and he has been there ever since.

NAAPID coordinators say they've received requests for information on the event from schools or organizers in nearly all 50 states and Washington, D.C.

Though the Detroit Public Schools have not scheduled an official district-wide observance, Supt. Dr. David Snead encouraged all 261 school communities "to use this day as an occasion during Black History Month when we can invite additional individuals and groups to become educational partners with the DPS."

Snead added: "I commend Mr. Dulin for his efforts to encourage parents nationwide to increase their levels of participation."

For more information on NAAPID, call 1-800-351-4097, or to get an information packet, send $3 to NAAPID at 4377 Textile Road, Ypsilanti 48197.

Here are upcoming Black History Month events. If you'd like us to publicize your event, fax it to us at 313-567-9647. Include phone number so we can verify the event:

Judith Byfield, Ph.D. from Dartmouth College, will talk about "Yoruba Women Indigo Dyers of Nigeria: Innovation and Conflict" at 1 p.m. Wednesday. ### French troops in peril after killing Serb

SARAJEVO — NATO officials say French troops were in imminent danger last week when they killed one Bosnian Serb sniper and took into custody another gunman in a Serb-controlled suburb of Sarajevo. The Thursday night incident was the first time since the NATO Peace Implementation Force's mission began in December that use of force against one of the factions in the Balkan conflict resulted in a death.

Israel-Lebanon talks stall

LONDON — Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres said Thursday that Syria had effectively vetoed peace talks between Lebanon and Israel. At a news conference here, Peres said Israel had wanted to begin peace talks with Lebanon, but that "the Syrians did not want parallel negotiations." Syria has at least 35,000 troops in Lebanon and has a major say in its government's decisions.

Whitewater overtakes O.J.

WASHINGTON — Democrats announced that a GOP-led Senate probe of the Whitewater affair has exceeded the length of the O.J. Simpson murder trial. By last week, a Senate panel had questioned 100 witnesses over 259 days, compared to the 258 days of the Simpson trial.

Farrakhan-Libya tie probed

WASHINGTON — House Republicans have announced plans to hold investigative hearings into Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan's visit to Libya last month. Rep. Peter King said Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy's announced intention to donate $1 billion to the Nation of Islam represents financial assistance "from a sworn enemy of the United States."

Forbes surges in wide-open GOP race

By Helen Thomas
United Press International

WASHINGTON — Does money talk? Republicans may find out Feb. 20 when the nation's first primary will be held in New Hampshire.

Multimillionaire magazine publisher Steve Forbes has shelled out enormous amounts of money since he announced his presidential aspirations in September, and so far his effort has been rewarded.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole of Kansas had been considered the unbeatable front-runner until his rebuttal to President Clinton's January State of the Union address fell flat and left him open to attacks by the other party candidates.

A new Boston Globe/WBZ-TV survey of likely GOP voters showed Forbes leading Dole 31-22 percent. Pollsters said Forbes has gained 17 points since a survey three weeks ago, and attributed the support to Forbes' image as a Washington outsider and a growing perception that Dole, at 72, is too old to enter the White House.

Other GOP hopefuls also fared poorly in the new poll. Pat Buchanan, who topped both Dole and Forbes in an earlier survey in Alaska, had just 11 percent, with six other candidates lagging still farther behind.

But none seem about to throw in the towel — certainly not Dole. He may find New Hampshire is still loyal to the loyal party man who often has carried the ball for the GOP.

The current state of Republican politics is volatile, to say the least. Instead of trashing the president, the candidates are having a field day jumping on one another. Such antics may come back to haunt them in August when it's time to pick the candidate who will oppose Clinton.

For Dole, the presidency is what he believes should be the natural culmination of his long career. However, his image is not the one the GOP is trying to project these days, and Dole has had to modify his views to go along with the conservative agenda.

That may have been a bitter pill to swallow, but Dole has said he will do anything and say anything to be president. He understands that the conservatives control the party and can call the shots. Still, with so many candidates and so many different agendas, Republicans no longer appear to have that solid front so visible in November 1994 after their sweeping congressional victories.

Conyers sets hearing on police conduct

WASHINGTON (UPI) — U.S. Rep. John Conyers will conduct a public hearing in Detroit this week on police brutality.

The Detroit Democrat said the hearing follows up on a civil rights leader's charge that local police misconduct reports rose 25 percent last year.

The Rev. Wendell Anthony, head of the Detroit NAACP, had asked for a Justice Department probe into alleged civil rights violations by suburban police.

"The possession of a badge is not a license to violate citizens rights," Anthony said Thursday. "This is not an indictment of all officers" but a forum is needed "to expose those guilty of misconduct."

Recent charges of police mistreatment of blacks also have prompted an investigation in western Michigan.

Last week a Grand Rapids committee was formed to investigate the conduct of three white police officers. Residents there say the officers, who were acquitted on charges of beating a black man in Kalamazoo, harass blacks.

Assistant U.S. Atty. Gen. Deval Patrick, head of the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division, will attend the hearing Feb. 10 at the Theodore Levin Courthouse, 231 W. Lafayette, in downtown Detroit.

Another bomb blast

Rescue workers in the Sri Lankan capital of Colombo evacuate a victim of Wednesday's monstrous truck-bomb blast, an apparent suicide attack by Tamil rebels. By the weekend, the death toll had risen to at least 121 with 1,400 other people injured, rescue workers said. The bombing, which drew comparisons to the Oklahoma City federal building blast, devastated an entire city block in Colombo's main business district.

New York teens arrested on bomb charge

NEW YORK (UPI) — Three teen-age boys from the suburbs of Syracuse are charged with having plotted to explode a homemade bomb at their school. They reportedly learned to make the device over the Internet.

The unidentified eighth graders at Opine Grove Junior High School in the upstate suburb of Minoa, who were arrested Wednesday, already had set off a test device, the New York Times reported. They have been suspended from school and charged as juveniles with conspiracy.

Police said a small bottle of fertilizer, a bottle containing diesel fuel and other items that can be used to assemble bombs were seized in the home of one of the suspects.

The newspaper quoted Capt. William Bleyle of the Manlius police as saying the boys had planned to detonate the device in the school this weekend. He added that the material seized probably was not enough to set off a major explosion but could have touched off a fire.

Bleyle said the bomb-making plans came from the Internet, a worldwide system that links computer users.

That's not noise! It's your car's throaty rumble

By Martha Hindes
Journal Staff Writer

Five liters of harnessed horsepower strain at a standstill, seemingly ready to surge forward. In the next lane, an equally powerful engine rumbles its response.

Like two wary rams during mating season, the drivers eye each other. They probably won't peel rubber when the traffic light changes. But they sure like to sound that way.

Automakers are finding that to make a vehicle a sound investment, they have to make an investment in sound. And while a lot of autos and trucks on the road are just plain noisy, manufacturers are learning to control the harshness and build in just the right kinds of noises to fit the image a vehicle should have.

Whether it's the high-pitched purr of a subcompact or the smooth drone of a luxury sedan, every vehicle on the road has a distinctive voice.

It probably isn't the only reason a Mustang owner likes a Mustang or a Camaro driver chooses a Camaro. And sound might not be a selling point in a dealer's showroom. But there's an intrinsic value that's getting a lot of attention these days.

"Actually, I can tell a GM any time," said Ford Motor Co. acoustical engineer Robert Brooks. "It has pretty much a throaty, rumbling sound to me. I can pretty much tell a Porsche. A lot of cars have their own distinctive sound."

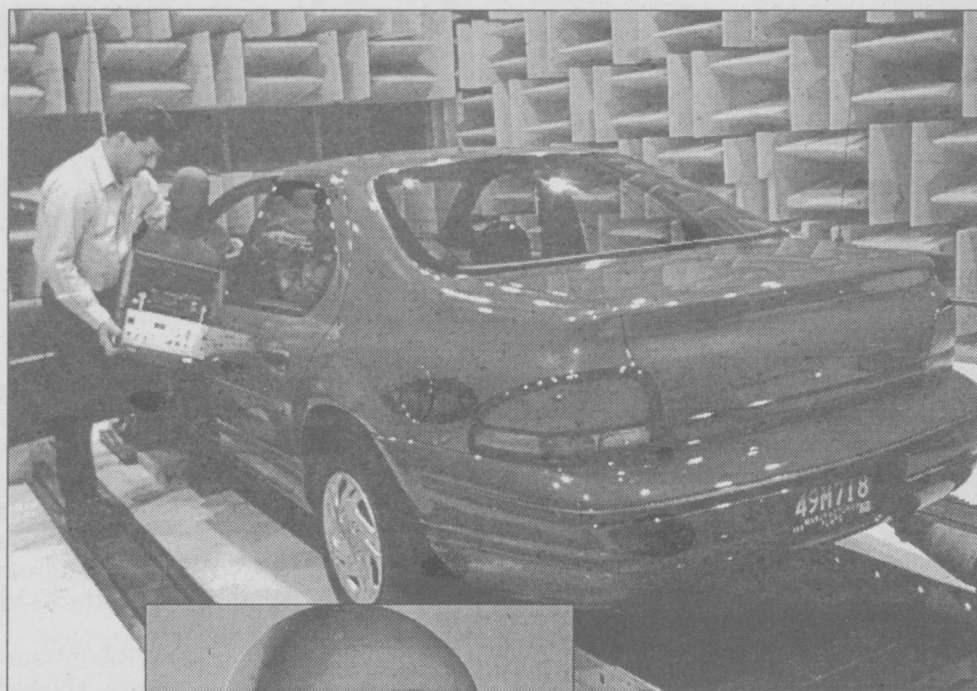

In Ford's 3-year-old Advanced Engineering and Design Center in Dearborn, Brooks and other sound specialists are working on early and late stages of sound control on cars being readied for production.

Armed with sophisticated robotics, computers and sound-measuring equipment, they check every dissonance and categorize each nuance in the noise that's created when a vehicle's engine is started or revved up.

An aging blue velour dummy nicknamed Elwood — as in the Blues Brothers — waits to be called into service. Like its newer, less distinctive siblings Spock, Data, Athena and Hal, Elwood is just a head with human-style ears, designed to catch and record the same sounds an occupant actually hears in a vehicle on the road.

It will help the engineers control the chaos of noises from the powertrain,

A Dodge Stratus is checked inside a sound-proof chamber. Automakers not only want to rid cars of bad sounds, but to build in the kinds of noises a vehicle should have. Signature noises are built in through the exhaust system where the shape, size and location of pipes, mufflers and joints create the car's character.

Consumer outrage can fill in some lost ground

By Esther Shapiro
Special to the Journal

Shakespeare wrote poetically of "the winter of our discontent." For consumers, it has been a decade of winters. A steady erosion of government protection and the closing down of one consumer protection office after another through budget cuts have left us with little or no insulation against the biting winds of laissez-faire.

I felt this most keenly last December when Charlene Berels, the Washtenaw County Consumer Protection Office's director, called to tell me her unit had lost its budget battle and was shutting down. That left Detroit with the state's only all-purpose consumer office.

Other government offices fill the gap a little, but none offer a broad spectrum of advocacy and education. The Food and Drug Administration has a Detroit-based consumer affairs officer, Evelyn DeNike, who covers a

commentary

multistate region. She's great on food or drug questions but can't take your deceptive furniture ad complaint. A few county prosecutors — very few — have consumer divisions that go to court on behalf of those cheated by unlicensed contractors. But, most will tell you, "that's a civil matter," and advise you to find an attorney.

Look to the state for assistance? The Michigan Consumers Council was written out of the budget four years ago. Have a complaint about an unlicensed contractor? Don't waste your time. The Department of Commerce's Bureau of Occupational and Professional Regulation will take action, with a possible loss of license as a threat. But they can't act when the operator is unlicensed.

That shouldn't stop an irate consumer. Doing unlicensed work over $600 is illegal. A prosecutor could take action, but, it's a "civil matter," remember? You can protect yourself by phoning Lansing for license verification before signing a contract, if you don't mind calling a 900 number, at $1.50 per minute.

If bureaucrats won't protect us, our state legislators will. Sure. An action in the last session decimated limits on consumer credit rates. As of mid-March, there will be no limit on interest rates for bank credit cards (Visa, MasterCard) and first home mortgages.

Retail credit cards such as Hudson's, Winkelman's and Crowley's can go to a 25-percent maximum interest rate. The same limit applies to other types of credit contracts, including auto and home installment loans and second mortgages.

Other bills in preparation include changes in auto no-fault insurance, with medical expense caps, and potential elimination of the PSC.

Congress has not exactly been our friend. Truth-in-Lending and Truth-in-Savings protection may be watered down. We know that clean air and water safeguards are lessened. Oil, coal and logging interests are hacking away at wilderness areas that were to be preserved for future generations.

Consumers should not accept these losses as inevitable. An aroused public can be effective. Two years ago, a Republican state representative tried to amend the Michigan item pricing law to drop the requirement to place a price on all retail products. The outrage that followed killed his amendment.

Our leaders will be begging for voter support this year. Before you respond, memorize these six little words:

You get what you vote for.

Listening pays off as a business strategy

Barbara Stanbridge has spent more than 20 years developing her skills as an active listener. As she has, her leadership style has changed and grown.

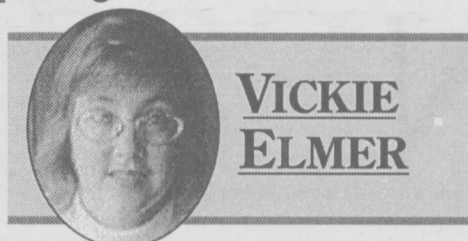

Stanbridge, president and CEO of CHANGE Human Resource Development in Detroit, believes active listening has enhanced her consulting business and improved her effectiveness in organizations and on boards of directors.

Active listening is a crucial but often overlooked talent of female leaders — executives, heads of major charities and even prosecutor Marcia Clark.

Listening taps two important areas: gathering information and developing relationships, according to Deborah Tannen, author of "Talking from 9 to 5, Women and Men in the Workplace, Language Sex and Power" (Avon Books, 1995, $12.50 paperback).

"To say that a person feels listened to means a lot more than just their ideas get heard. It's a sign of respect. It makes people feel valued," says Tannen, a professor of linguistics at Georgetown University. "They'll contribute a lot more if they feel listened to."

Active listeners don't just sit; they contribute. They ask good questions, provide feedback on what they've heard and seek consensus or point out dichotomies within a group.

VICKIE

Stanbridge, who serves on the board of the National Association of Women Business Owners, sometimes listens for missing pieces or inconsistencies and watches for clues that the group is overlooking something or someone.

"As women especially, I don't think we should always listen with the idea that we're going to build consensus. ... Be more than a bridge builder and a consensus shaper. Be the person who senses that a decision would be premature," she says.

Stanbridge used to be very agenda-focused, charging off to help a cause or create change. Now she usually focuses on facilitation, active listening and encouraging directional movement.

"If people see you as someone who is open to being influenced, then, in fact, you can be very influential," she says.

In CHANGE, her consulting business, she often works with presidents or owners of mid-sized companies who face some sort of personnel problem.

As they share their stories or concerns, she listens carefully and highlights themes and connections, feeding back to them what she hears. She keeps probing and questioning. Often after they hear her summaries, "clients are into solving their own problem and that means they are more committed to their own solution," Stanbridge says.

Though active listening works well for women, it's not without complications.

Tannen notes that there are many ways to indicate listening, depending on the person's gender, upbringing, race and more.

Women, for example, often make "verbal listening noises" — the uh-huhs, ah-ahs and yeahs that punctuate many conversations. Men sometimes assume these noises mean "Yes, I agree," when women are indicating only, "Yes, I'm listening."

Tannen suggests that people question their assumptions and treat differences with respect and an open mind.

What happens when a client or a colleague needs your attention and active listening skills just when you must finish another project?

"Women should be able to postpone the conversation if they cannot give it their attention," says Donna Fisher, author of "People Power, 12 Power Principles to Enrich Your Business, Career and Personal Networks" (Bard & Stephen Publishers, 1995, $14.95).

"Say: 'I am swamped right now; I've got this going on. I want to be here for you, but let's do it another time.'"

As busy as many women are, this approach makes sense — as long as the leader sets aside time later to hear out her colleague.

Here are some other tips on developing your active listening leadership skills:

■ Use questions to guide a conversation. Know what you want or need to know from the person.

■ Listen with an open mind. Take in data, but do not judge the data or the person presenting the data.

■ If you're new to an organization's board or key committee, listen with an ear to discovering the hidden agendas and taboo topics and to developing new allies in the group.

■ Reinforce other's comments in meetings. Stanbridge suggests saying things like "I appreciate so-and-so saying that because ..." or "I support that idea" and then give your analysis.

■ Focus on the individual and, for a few moments, forget the rest of the world, Fisher says. Eye contact, turning on the answering machine or closing a door may help.

Automakers make investment in sound

exhaust system, tires and road that bombard a car's interior. Removing that noise, vibration and harshness allows engineers to fine tune vehicles for their own distinctive sound qualities.

When unpleasant sounds collide in a car engine or exhaust system, even the muted effect can be relayed to an occupant, resulting in a frayed temper, a pounding headache, a feeling the vehicle just isn't running the way it should.

Before good sounds — or tones — can be put into a vehicle, as much noise as possible has to be taken out by removing structural vibration or eliminating spaces, said Chrysler Corp.'s Keith Wright, manager of engine engineering for large car platforms.

That keeps the car body from amplifying the vibrations and magnifying noise that could turn it into a sort of giant stereo speaker on wheels. Smaller spaces between moving parts, such as around the pistons that drive an engine, help to dampen the noise. Other parts are stiffened, constructed in sound-absorbing layers or adjusted to reduce noise and whine.

"The goal is to make (the engine) so stiff it never vibrates, no matter how fast the engine is running," said Wright. "What we do want to hear is a sound as smooth as a sewing machine so there are no changes when it goes from zero to the 'red line,' so there are no peaks or valleys."

While getting rid of bad sounds is important, so is making sure the characteristic ones remain. The signature sounds of a Porsche or a Dodge Neon or a Lincoln Town Car are built in through the exhaust system where the shape, size and location of pipes, mufflers and joints create the vehicle's character.

To find the best mix of noise, groups of sound testing volunteers in earphones are subjected to comparison tests to identify combinations of sounds they like best. Experts will perfect the aural mixture, but average drivers tell them what to do with different segments of vehicles, said Ford Motor Co.'s Brooks.

"That's so when you hear something you know this is, say, a Pontiac, compared with a Mustang," he said.

While today's vehicles are much quieter than those built five or 10 years ago, tomorrow's could have even more distinctive personalities as manufacturers perfect the art of fine tuning.

"There are two reasons we develop exhaust sound systems," he added. "One, it represents quality to the customer. The second reason is it matches the image to the vehicle, so when we see a Mustang it has a nice, powerful sound. But typical buyers of Town Cars don't want to hear any noise at all."

Death penalty is not a capital idea

For supporters of capital punishment, the week of Jan. 21 must have felt like an extended holiday season. One prisoner was killed by firing squad, one by hanging and one by lethal injection.

According to the polls, the vast majority of Americans continue to believe capital punishment is justifiable when it comes to folks like John Albert Taylor, convicted of raping and murdering an 11-year-old girl. Taylor was executed by firing squad Jan. 26.

Anything even approaching rehabilitation for criminals, regardless of whether they've been convicted of murder or stealing, is viewed with scorn as a sofie approach.

It is this kind of hard-core attitude that explains why prisoner education programs are on the chopping block, while support for the death penalty and the reimplementation of chain gangs is stronger than ever.

This is twisted logic, since a considerable amount of evidence exists suggesting that prisoner education and job training programs work far better than any tough-on-crime measure ever did. Programs such as these have been proven to reduce the recidivism rate and improve the behavior of prisoners involved in the programs.

Prison guards say the scariest prisoner is an uneducated, angry, locked-up individual with no hope and nothing to look forward to except the daily dreary routine and the threat of violence every waking – and sleeping – moment. The overwhelming majority of prison inmates, close to 70 percent, are functionally illiterate. Surely this fact should turn on a light bulb somewhere deep in the public mind.

Then again, maybe not.

Alabama received a lot of publicity in mid-1995 for the brain-dead decision of reimplementing chain gangs. Soon there were rumblings in Michigan urging that the idea be tried here. This month the Colorado legislature is considering chain gangs. Call it the domino effect of stupidity. Chain gangs make for great publicity photos and they guarantee plentiful media coverage, but that's about it.

If chain gangs and the death penalty did anything to reduce crime, or worked effectively as a deterrent, then at least supporters of these measures could claim they are putting brakes on the problem. Absent such evidence, however, all these folks are left with to support their appetite for killing killers and beating down all other criminals is irrational bloodlust and revenge – not justice.

Keep in mind that revenge and justice are different things. Putting aside for the moment the fact that the death penalty has more than once resulted in a person being wrongly executed for a crime he never committed, the death penalty gives human beings a degree of power over other human beings that few if any are qualified to administer. Man still doesn't do a good job of playing God.

This doesn't mean that certain folks aren't beyond rehabilitation. That's what life sentences are for.

However, for Americans to insist on the continued implementation of legalized, government-approved killing, even after it has been proven ineffective as a deterrent to crime, is to send this country into an insane, backward spiral away from civilization toward the stone age.

You can't kill your way to a better world.

Can Clinton keep his job?

From Hoover to Bush, incumbent presidents have dreaded bad economic news as election time nears. President Clinton faces an election day 10 months from now amid signs that our robust economy is getting tired. By most logic he ought to worry. But the tumultuous events in Congress over the past year may make even a softening economy work in Clinton's favor this year.

Put simply, whose hands would voters rather have on our social safety net when the next recession hits? A Democrat like Clinton who has tried to resist the shredding of the government's commitments to the elderly, the poor, our children and our environment? Or Republican freshmen who never saw an entitlement program they didn't love to destroy?

American voters generally talk a lean-government, rugged-individualism sort of talk. But when crunch time comes, they invariably want to protect their student loans, farm subsidies, mortgage deductions and old-age pensions.

The elderly have proved our most vocal minority, wielding their vast influence to protect everything from Social Security to Medicare. It's hard to imagine that they, or most other Americans, would rest comfortably at night knowing the government no longer stands between the wolf and their door.

To be sure, federal powerbrokers have all sorts of ways of starting up an anemic economy in time for election day. The Federal Reserve Board just cut interest rates and is expected to do so again before November. Clinton can point to the relatively low unemployment rate and the high rate of job creation in America. Our economy may be softening, but it's a long way from going in the tank.

Republican leaders could be forgiven for secretly hoping for an economic downturn in time to boot Clinton from the White House. They may recall with bitterness that our bullish economy began to roar just a month or so too late to benefit President Bush in 1992. Turnabout is fair play, they may reason; if voters ejected Bush during a recession, they ought to do the same for Clinton.

Such reasoning ignores the realities. The feckless Bush lost his job not because of the recession but for his seeming indifference to it. Clinton may keep his job despite hard times if voters perceive he can face the problem better than the Republicans.

And what the Republicans offer this year can and should scare a lot of voters. American society works best when we take care of each other, not when we adopt the attitude of everyone for himself and devil take the hindmost.

Our economy may be weakening; but the greater danger we face is the weakening of our national commitment to those of us in harm's way. If voters believe that Clinton is the best man to uphold that commitment, then he'll deserve another four years in the White House.

Free agent Purtan hot to trot over to WJR

Purtan's packing

Radio top jock Dick Purtan will be cooling his heels in Oakland County Circuit Court on Wednesday while Judge Fred Mester rules on whether he'll be freed from his contract at WKQI-FM (95.5) soon.

The contract keeps Purtan there until February 1997 – but it also contains a clause that lets Purtan give notice if the station is sold, which it was last spring.

Rumors have Purtan itching to get out of his WKQI deal so he can skate over to WJR-AM (760) and seize the morning helm vacated by the late great J.P. McCarthy.

Purtan's legal eagle, Henry Baskin, says that's pure fertilizer probably being circulated by WKQI-FM types to paint Purtan as opportunistic. "Truth is, Dick is a free agent and they're saying he isn't," says Baskin. "Truth is, the people from New York, who owned WCZY-FM, sold to Evergreen Broadcasting out of Texas last May, and since that time Dick has been trying to negotiate a new contract with the station." Baskin notes that the clause gives Purtan the right to leave a year after any sale.

As for Baskin, he's ready to stroll down the aisle with fiancée Debbie Schultz, but he won't say exactly when. Maybe the two will coo their I-do's after Purtan's lawsuit gets settled, so they can go on a nice long worry-free honeymoon? (Just a guess, darlings...)

Watch what you eat – it may go to your head

Ludwig Feuerbach (1804-72) actually managed to make ends meet as a philosopher – something quite impossible nowadays. But Herr Feuerbach (whose name means Firestream, like the name of a Pontiac or a subdivision) apparently also thought himself a nutritionist.

In fact, though he had a wallop impact on the history of Western religious and philosophical thought, our Ludwig is probably best known for his declaration that "Mann ist was er isst." Or, loosely paraphrased: You are what you eat.

No, he didn't think that just because you had a tuna salad sandwich for lunch meant that you were made of tuna, mayo, pickles and pumpernickel until the stuff metabolized. Rather, he believed that what people ate made them the way they were.

For instance, he claimed the Germans of his day were especially rambunctious and creative precisely because they ate a lot of beans. Modern scholarship, however, has determined that the ingestion of great quantities of beans actually is responsible for Germans' traditional love of tuba music.

BEAUFORT

As it turns out, while Ludwig was full of baloney in applying his theory to an entire nation, certain foods may indeed have a positive effect on individuals. For example, this month's Reader's Digest serves up a Ladies' Home Journal story about foods that studies say may positively affect "our ability to feel more alert, calm – even upbeat."

Sounds great, eh? Among these don't-worry-be-happy wonders are:

- Whole-grain bread, which boosts serotonin, the mood-elevating brain chemical also stimulated by Prozac and other anti-depressants.
- Turkey, which increases the brain's dopamine and norepinephrine levels, improving motivation and reaction time.
- Beef, for iron, to combat fatigue.
- Bananas, which contain magnesium, a stress fighter.
- Oranges and grapefruits, for our old friend Vitamin C, which increases norepinephrine and helps the body absorb iron.
- Brazil nuts, for selenium, a mineral that seems to elevate moods. (Forget for a minute that Brazil nuts are saturated with saturated fats; the thought can be a real downer.)
- Hot peppers, because the brain may release calming painkillers called endorphins in reaction to their scalding.

No doubt, the notion of good-mood foods has a pleasant ring. It certainly makes more sense than previous "brain food" theories like the one about fish making you smarter.

The only food that ever made me smarter was onions, and that's because the first time I ate one I learned I'd never eat another. If I'd been born in New Orleans, where they put onions on everything from Frosted Flakes to cappuccino, I'd have refused to be weaned.

On the other hand, an equally hateful relative of the onion may assist theories that food can determine behavior. As it happens, the Roman emperor Nero was nicknamed "Porrophagus" because of his fierce consumption of leeks (Latin porrum).

Nero, you'll recall, was a truly nasty fellow, but to despisers of onions and their ilk, that's no surprise: He was what he ate.

Paisley Goes With Nothing

By Hal Rubenstein and Jim Mullen
Doubleday, $18; 226 pages

By Diane Hofsess
Journal Staff Writer

For the men in this world, here are a few free words of fashion advice:

- Your socks should never be funnier than you are.
- Old ski-lift tickets are not a fashion accessory.
- Dress the way you want to be treated.

This advice comes from a new book for men called "Paisley Goes With Nothing," a humorous guide to men's fashion and manners in the '90s, written by Hal Rubenstein of In Style magazine and Jim Mullen of Entertainment Weekly magazine.

"Everything in the book is very smart ass, but I'm not fooling when I say carnations are a crappy flower to give someone or that cashmere socks really do feel amazing on your feet," says Rubenstein, the former men's style editor at the New York Times and now editor-at-large for In Style.

The duo of 45-year-old authors maintain that men truly need this book: "American men are not trained in the art of behavior," Rubenstein says by phone from New York.

"I just think everyone's forgotten how to be a gentleman. It's not necessarily about holding a door for a woman or buying flowers. It's about manners and behavior. We've been so busy trying to make a living that we've forgotten how to live."

So Rubenstein and his sidekick wrote a book that reads like a crash course in gentlemanly behavior and style, a sort of Miss Manners meets GQ guidebook.

It has sections on "50 Things Every Man Must Have," like a fog-free shaving mirror and something cashmere, and "50 Things Every Man Must Know," like one clean joke and that you never show up for dinner at anyone's house empty-handed.

It goes into detail about matters the authors say men were never taught, like how to buy a suit ("Look at your butt; everyone else will") and how to buy shoes ("You don't need as many shoes as socks, but you need to have more shoes than Phillips screwdrivers").

Most men over 30 or so have no faith or trust in their own fashion sense, largely because no one ever taught them how to shop or how to put themselves together, says Mullen, who writes the Hot Sheet column for Entertainment Weekly.

Younger men, however, have more of a flair for dressing and developing a personal style, Rubenstein says. "That's because they're brought up in malls and got their sense of style by osmosis."

Yet even sharp-dressing Generation Xers could use a little advice on how to buy a gift for a family member or how to pack a suitcase, Rubenstein says. The book is designed to fill those voids in male education that separate the men from the gentlemen.

"The book is about making life simpler," Rubenstein says. "Guys don't know this stuff. It seems to be out of their curriculum."

But it is now within reach for those who bother to read "Paisley." And just in case you don't read it, here's one last piece of advice from the authors: "If you're over 40, your ears now need a haircut, too."

A stimulating portrait of UAW's driving force

The Most Dangerous Man in Detroit

By Nelson Lichtenstein
Basic Books, $35; 575 pages

By Dana Houle
Special to the Journal

With strikes in the news and high expectations for new AFL-CIO President John Sweeney, Nelson Lichtenstein's biography of former UAW President Walter Reuther is a timely account of American workers struggling to improve their lives through union solidarity.

Despite some dubious conclusions, "The Most Dangerous Man in Detroit" provides a detailed and stimulating look at one of America's greatest unions and its most charismatic leader.

Reuther grew up in West Virginia, where he was educated in socialism by his father and learned intellectual debate with his brothers Victor and Roy, both of whom went on to important positions in the UAW. Walter also learned die-making, and, in 1927, he came to Detroit and landed a job in Henry Ford's Rouge plant, where he stayed until 1932, when he and Victor left for a two-year stint in a Soviet auto factory.

He returned in 1935 and promptly joined fellow socialists who had begun organizing Michigan's auto plants. The results were astonishing. By 1940, Reuther and his cadre had organized much of the automobile, aviation and agricultural machinery industries, making the UAW one of the most powerful unions in America.

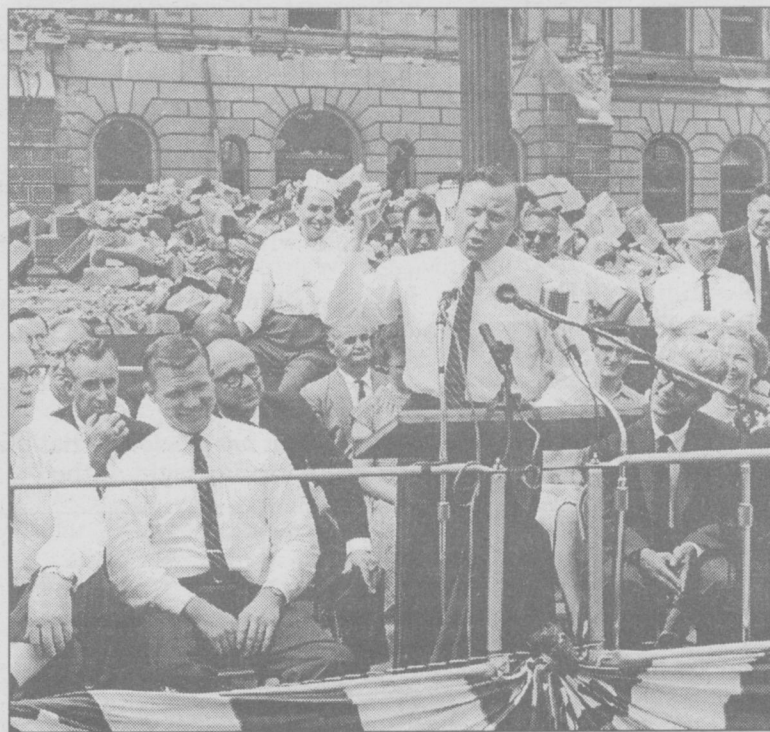

Reuther's personal ascent was almost as dramatic. In 1940, he became director of the UAW's General Motors division. Six years later, after he led a successful 113-day strike against GM, he waged a bitter campaign against the UAW's communist faction and was narrowly elected president.

From 1946 until his death in a plane crash in 1970, Reuther was the most famous unionist in the world. His aim was to organize UAW members into a vanguard using "pragmatic radicalism" to bring about social transformation and economic justice. While Reuther and the UAW did not always meet these lofty standards, their results were much greater than the author acknowledges.

Lichtenstein, a historian at the University of Virginia, argues that "Reuther's faith in collective bargaining... had proven a grave miscalculation." He faults Reuther for abandoning his goal of creating a system in which business, labor and the federal government jointly plan production, pricing, work rules and wages. This position trivializes the amazing improvements in wages, benefits and living standards the UAW's contracts guaranteed for its members.

Reuther substituted the goal of labor influence over production with contracts that improved the lives of millions of workers. These victories allowed auto workers to leave cramped ethnic neighborhoods and buy houses in the suburbs.

They also made the job of organizing them for direct action more difficult than during the '30s, when ethnic and religious bonds existed among the workforce drawn from neighborhoods around the plants.

The difficulty of mobilizing his members, as well as hostility toward Reuther's social activism from other unions in the AFL-CIO, ruled out direct political action and led Reuther to a close relationship with the Democratic Party.

Unfortunately, the Democratic Party at that time was dominated by Southern conservatives opposed to civil rights and tied to big business. Lichtenstein is right to accuse Reuther of accommodation toward the Kennedy and Johnson administrations, but it's wishful fantasy to blame him for not exploiting the political and social chaos of 1968 to unite the unionized working class, the civil rights movement and the New Left. This movement might have coalesced around Robert Kennedy, but after his assassination and Hubert Humphrey's nomination for president, Reuther could have done little to help it along.

But by assuming that Reuther could have helped create a fundamental social transformation, Lichtenstein actually pays tribute to his immense power and idealism. Reuther may not have led American workers to the promised land, but there can be no doubt that his leadership of the UAW improved the lives of millions of Americans. Moreover, he left a legacy of action on behalf of social, political and racial justice that is still the standard by which American leaders should be judged.

Gulliver, Buddy Holly and other giants

The February ratings sweeps roar into high gear this week, highlighted by the network TV return of Ted Danson. As Sam Malone on "Cheers," he used to see little men before he stopped drinking. As Gulliver, he's seeing them again, but this time they're attacking him with ropes.

■ The AFC-NFC Pro Bowl, 6 tonight, ABC (Channel 7 in Detroit) – The last football game of the year. Honest. No fooling. Promise. Until summer, at least.

■ Gulliver's Travels, 9 tonight and 9 p.m. Monday, NBC (Channel 4 in Detroit) – Some of the most elaborate special effects ever mounted for a television production help bring Jonathan Swift's fanciful 1726 satire to life in a visually spectacular four-hour miniseries. The TV adaptation has led February's hype parade for various reasons: Its $28 million price tag; Ted Danson co-starring with his new, real-life wife, Mary Steenburgen, and because it's the undeniable crown jewel of NBC's sweeps month offerings. Ned Beatty, Geraldine Chaplin, Alfre Woodard, Omar Sharif, Peter O'Toole and Karyn Parsons are among the stars appearing along the journey.

■ The Boys Next Door, 9 tonight, CBS (Channel 62 in Detroit) – Michael Jeter ("Evening Shade"), Detroit native Courtney B. Vance and Nathan Lane sparkle as mentally challenged roommates in this alternately moving and mirthful "Hallmark Hall of Fame" TV movie about the dedicated social worker (Tony Goldwyn) charged with keeping them out of harm's way. Look for Mare Winningham in a supporting role.

■ Black History Month specials: "Maya Angelou: Intimate Portrait" (10 tonight, Lifetime) profiles America's best-known living poet; James Brown (Owww!) is a soulful subject of "Biography" (8 p.m. Monday, A&E cable); the late Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall's battles against school segregation are chronicled in the documentary "Simple Justice" (9 p.m. Tuesday, HBO); and a horrific era of history is recalled in "The Last Lynching," an installment of The Learning Channel's "This Century" series (8 p.m. Thursday, TLC).

■ Not Fade Away: Remembering Buddy Holly, 8 p.m. Monday and Tuesday, The Nashville Network – Thirty-seven years after the plane crash that took the young rock 'n' roll innovator's life, Holly receives a double dose of adoration from Nashville, a city that ironically gave him very little credence when he was alive. This two-night memorial is part documentary on the making of the Holly tribute album "notfadeaway," part performance segments from such CD contributors as Mary Chapin Carpenter, the Crickets, the Mavericks and Waylon Jennings. Oh, Boy!

■ Second Noah, 8 p.m. Monday, ABC (Channel 7 in Detroit) – "Eight is Enough" merges with "Wild Kingdom" in the debut of a new mid-season family series about Noah Beckett (Daniel Hugh Kelly), a Tampa-based writer who, with his veterinarian wife, Jesse (Betsy Brantley), rides herd over a brood of eight adopted kids and a menagerie of 37 assorted pets.

■ Frasier, 9 p.m. Tuesday, NBC (Channel 4) – After three seasons of lusting after her in his heart and turning goo-goo eyed at the mere scent of the woman, an estranged Niles (Emmy-winner David Hyde Pierce) gets his best chance to turn his love light on Daphne (Jane Leeves) in a watershed episode which finds her going cheek to cheek with Young Dr. Crane to teach him the "dance d'amour" in preparation for a society dance.

■ The NBA All-Star Weekend, 10 p.m. Friday, TNT – The All-Star con-

In "Gulliver's Travels," Ted Danson leads an all-star cast that includes his real-life wife Mary Steenburgen and Peter O'Toole in this adaption of the Jonathan Swift classic. The two-part miniseries begins at 9 tonight on NBC, Channel 4 in Detroit.

test itself (a.k.a. "The Grant Hill Coronation") isn't till next Sunday, but the NBA's brand of pre-game hoopla has arguably become just as fan-tastic. TNT's coverage from San Antonio begins Friday night with a one-hour overview of the league at midseason, followed at noon Saturday by the celebrity-studded "All-Star Youth Celebration" and culminating with the good stuff – the NBA rookie game, slam-dunk competition and long-distance shoot-out – at 7 p.m. Saturday.

It's colorful, it's atmospheric, but will it pay off in the ratings?

Lights, camera, Action News

The new set is part den, part rainbow

By Jim McFarlin
Journal TV Writer

A "hero-like" local newscast on Detroit TV?

That's one of the adjectives used by Detroit's Channel 7 (WXYZ) to describe the look of its brand-new, boldly colorful news set and graphics, unveiled on the ABC affiliate last Monday. Not coincidentally, that was the beginning of TV's important February ratings sweeps.

Eliminating one of the last remnants of the station's Bonds-ian news era — the on-camera appearance of its "Action News" broadcasts — WXYZ dumped the traditional, symmetrical news set it has used since 1990 and replaced it with a futuristic theater-in-the-round layout, part den and part rainbow, created by stage designer Holland Wilde of the Boston firm East Coast Creative.

The overall look is embellished by a touch of Hollywood. Channel 7 also retained the services of Los Angeles graphics group GRFX/Novocom, which has created animation sequences for such programs as the Academy Awards telecast, "Entertainment Tonight" and "Hard Copy," to produce a new three-dimensional animated package for the station.

The "Action News" opening, described by its designers as "atmospheric" and "hero-like," is now awash in vibrant moving layers of orange, yellow and blue, surrounding a "Circle-7" WXYZ logo that appears to burst like a tiny sun.

The total redesign, which will be used in each of Channel 7's five daily newscasts as well as on "Sunday Sports Update" and elections specials, took an entire year to complete and, by some estimates, may have cost upwards of $500,000. "I won't say how much, but it's the price of a nice house in a nice neighborhood," says WXYZ design director Diane Fiolek-Mandel.

"This is a design director's dream," she says. "I was able to go outside (the station) and hire a set designer and a graphics company and work with them. It was so much fun to pull in the best people

A wealth of influences makes Rich a force in R&B

By Gary Graff
Journal Music Writer

It may seem a bit premature to add Tony Rich to Detroit's formidable roster of great R&B singers, even though his first single, "Nobody Knows," has rocketed into the Billboard Top 10.

But Rich is no rookie. He's produced, written and remixed hits for Boyz II Men, TLC, Toni Braxton and Pebbles. He may be a new artist, but he's a well-seasoned talent.

"Working with other artists helped to build my character as a producer and a writer," says Rich, 24, now an Atlanta resident who will be back home Monday for some radio interviews to promote his album, "Words." "When it came time to do my album, I knew how to do it and was able to be totally creative and in total control."

The second-oldest of five boys, Rich grew up near Highland Park and attended Central High School — where the music teacher advised him to have "something to fall back on." But musical ambitions were encouraged by his family; one aunt even co-signed a $20,000 loan that allowed him and older brother Joe, who collaborated on "Words," to buy state-of-the-art equipment. Former Pistons star John Salley was another early supporter.

Rich's work came to the attention of producer Dallas Austin, who used four of his songs for Pebbles. The singer introduced him to her husband, Antonio (L.A.) Reid, and his partner, Babyface; Rich became part of their LaFace Records stable, moving to Atlanta in March of 1993.

His own album is different from anything Rich has worked on, howev-

Mall life has a downside for upscale spin-off

It's tough enough to run an upscale restaurant in a mall (just ask Jimmy Schmidt about that), but to be stuck in a mall that closes at 6 on Saturday night truly adds insult to injury.

Saturday night is what traditionally makes up for all those slow Tuesdays. And when it's taken away, well, that can be worse than having the chef run off to Tahiti with the secret recipe for the salad dressing.

Phoenicia II, the restaurant in Dearborn's Fairlane Mall, a spin-off of the original in Birmingham, had been open only a few months and was still trying to build a customer base when the mall pulled the plug on the hottest night of the week.

Add the fact that the restaurant is tucked away on a side corridor on the second level just outside Saks Fifth Avenue – a location that virtually requires tracking dogs to find – and the problem is compounded.

On the other hand, that obscure location is a plus for those who want to escape the mall frenzy. And I guess that includes a lot of us.

What must be particularly frustrating to proprietor Sameer Eid about this whole experience is the fact that he is serious about his food. He's been that way since he opened his first modest restaurant in Highland Park – “Aug. 1, 1970” – and when he moved up in the world to Birmingham – “Nov. 17, 1982.” Eid easily reels off the dates. “It's my life,” he explains.

MOLLY ABRAHAM
Restaurants

Phoenicia II – “Oct. 3, 1995” – delivers more than just a quick snack. Like Jimmy Schmidt's Stellite in the Somerset Collection, its food stands on its own. And the space has all the amenities expected of a dining experience, from the well-appointed tables with their glossy white paper overlays and contrasting linen napkins in pale blue, pink and yellow to its handsomely muraled and sponge-painted walls. Loops of fabric are draped canopy-like overhead to shield diners from the ceiling lights.

Plate presentation is meticulous.

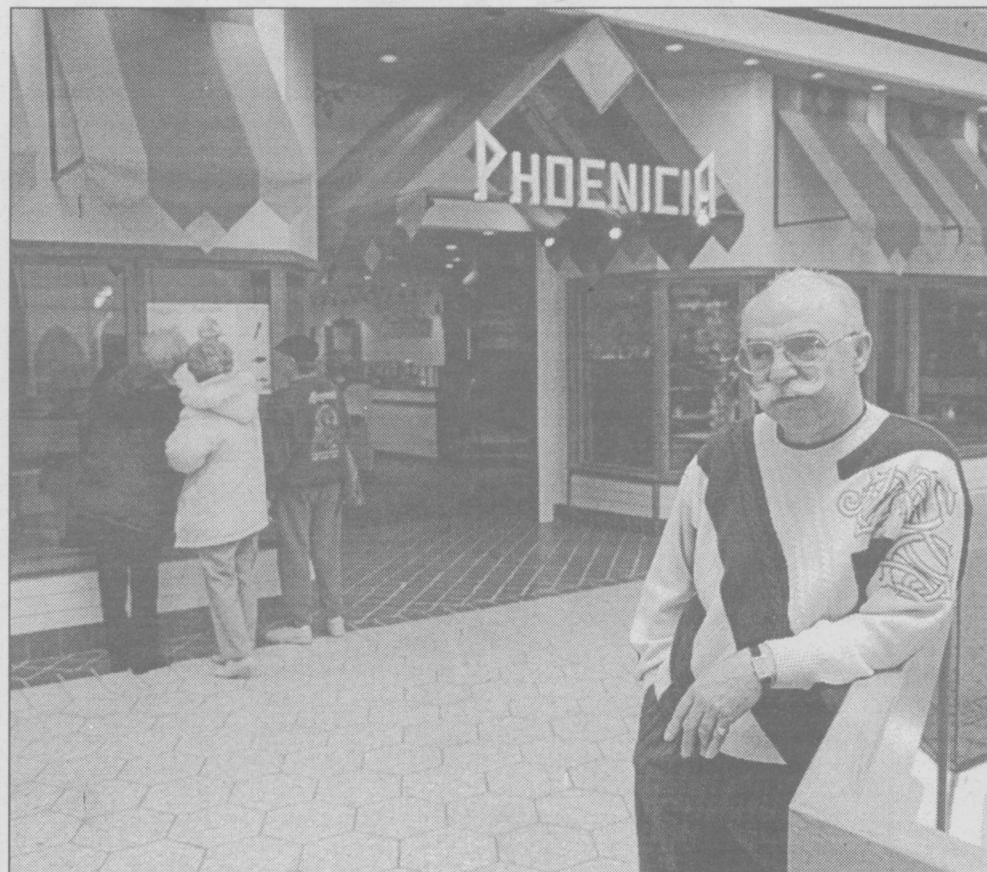

All this – and Dom Perignon on the wine list.

Naturally, the price structure reflects the upscale nature of the enterprise.

Substantial main courses, served with rice or roasted potatoes and green salad, range from $8.95 to $14.95, certainly not unreasonable but a notch higher than what might be expected in a mall.

While the menu direction is definitely Lebanese, it ranges well beyond hummus and baba ganouge to such dishes as broiled Lake Superior whitefish, sweetbreads with butter, garlic and shallots, baby back ribs and a newly created dish – salmon filet topped with cilantro, lime and fresh tomato and wrapped in grape leaves ($12.95).

There are a number of lighter – and less costly – dishes including sandwiches ($3.95-$5.95) and interesting soups from lentil to chicken and rice. “And the chicken stays in the soup and doesn't jump to another pot,” says Eid, who is fussy about his fresh ingredients. He makes his own veal and lamb sausage in natural casings, handpicks the portobello mushrooms and has a health-conscious approach to his cuisine.

Some of my favorite dishes at Phoenicia II are the main-course salads – fresh, colorful and heaped in glass bowls, like the beautiful version of the Greek and the yogurt with cucumber, mint leaves and garlic – or on big white plates, like the fatoush (romaine, cucumbers, tomatoes and toasted bread with lemon juice and olive oil).

Fresh, of course, has been a keyword with Eid since Aug. 1, 1970.

The changing portrait of African-American art

By Marsha Miro
Journal Art Critic

During this century the accepted term for identifying Americans of African origin has changed from Negro to Black American to African American. Tied up in the words have been issues of identity, social position and politics – issues that the culture's major artists coded into their art.

In 1926, Archibald Motley Jr. carefully painted white ladies at tea, attended by an elegant black servant. In 1960, Harold Neal drew a young black girl standing as she held a machine gun. And in 1988, Gilda Snowden sculpted the patterns and colors of her African-American origins in an ordered yet explosive totem.

These and the 33 other paintings and sculptures comprise “Collecting African-American Art: A Detroit Tradition,” a fine new exhibit at Wayne State University.

Borrowed from six local collections, the show is remarkable because, since the 1960s, Detroit's African-American art collectors have supported the culture even though it was largely ignored by the international art establishment. Also, the exhibit doesn't include a Romare Bearden or a Jacob Lawrence – two of the African-American artists who managed to be accepted by the art establishment despite its European bias.

That means nearly all of the works in the show were bought by the collectors because they believed the work had value in their African-American tradition even if it wasn't understood by those who judged from European roots.

Elizabeth Catlett's cast bronze “Head of a Negro Women,” from 1955 is valuable as a collective portrait of dignity and unflinching commitment; it carries the calm determination of a Rosa Parks. Leroy Foster's painting of bathers on Belle Isle is important for its connections to art history; the composition is like those of a classical frieze or carving where a story of heroic proportions was told in frozen actions.

Vincent Smith's “Blood on the Forge” from 1970 is critical as evidence of the stridency of blacks during those years when the fight against oppression became very public. An image of imprisonment where figures, brush strokes and colors all are slashing, brutal and intense, it says there was no place in this world to find compromise or peace.

Finally, the current work by the younger artists – Snowden, Bill Sanders, David Fludd, Tyrone Mitchell, Peter Williams and Howardena Pindell – reveals a shift, balancing both their European and African artistic heritage and taking the form to its next step.

The exhibit continues through Feb. 9 in the gallery in the Art and Art History building on Cass near Kirby. Gallery hours are noon-7 Mon., Tues.; 10-5 Wed.-Fri.; 1-4 Sat.

Attic reprises Greektown

By Liz Stevens
Journal Staff Writer

With "Twelfth Night" off and running, the Attic Theatre has truly come home. The theater company's new space, on the third floor of Trappers Alley, is but a few doors from its original 1976 location — the second floor of the Pegasus building in Greektown. And managing director Jim Moran, for one, is happy to be back.

"I frankly never wanted to leave the Greektown area," says Moran, one of the Attic's original members (the theater's last Greektown space, on Lafayette Street, suffered a fire in 1984). Over last Thanksgiving weekend, Moran received official word that the company's New Center theater would be demolished this summer. The building's maintenance had become too costly for its owner, Henry Ford Hospital, which plans to raze it for a parking lot.

"Frankly, it's not a very functional building," says Moran, who had known for several years that the structure eventually would fall to the bulldozers. Nevertheless, the Attic scheduled its 1995-1996 season under the assumption that the building would stand at least through the summer.

But what seemed a short-term emergency may turn out to have been kismet. The new theater's 215 seats surround the stage on three sides, and its high ceiling allows for the possible addition of a 130-seat mezzanine. The foot traffic in Greektown may lead to larger audiences, and Moran won't have to worry about faulty air conditioning or missing ceiling tiles.

Antoni Cimolino, associate artistic director of the Stratford Shakespeare Festival, has set the Attic's "Twelfth Night" during a 1930s Mardi Gras. "It's our classiest show of the year ... and the right play to open up the space," says Moran. "It's likely to get a lot of extra attention."

"Twelfth Night" runs through March 3. Call 313-875-8284.

"There was significant customer response from the coupons printed in the Detroit Sunday Journal"

A CHEAP CASH TOW, INC. Feb. 1, 1996
The Detroit Sunday Journal
Dear Sir:
A Cheap Cash Tow, Inc. was incorporated after the phone book listings were closed. As a result my phone number, which can be obtained from information, is not in the book. It will be next year.
My ultimate goal, as company president, was to provide towing services and jump starts at considerable savings (ranging to over 50%) to the consumer. I couldn't do that and successfully run a business unless I could circulate the company phone number effectively. Only volume could offset the reduced rates. Hence, my derived goal was to make that phone number available.
To accomplish that, I arranged advertising in the form of coupons that would provide reduced rates to customers who had clipped them and carried the coupons with them. These coupons were printed in five different publications.
First the bad news. From four of those publications, A Cheap Cash Tow, Inc., received none of the those coupons back from customers. One of the four actually printed the coupons with expired expiration dates, so I suppose the consumer wouldn't clip them, would he?
Now, the good news. There was significant customer response from the coupons printed in The Detroit Sunday Journal. I personally discussed this with customers in order to try to determine why there was such a major difference in response. The answer was clear. The readers of the Journal are people with a mission. They not only read the publication; they support it and the people who are running it. They want to purchase goods and services from the advertisers in this publication that they so strongly support.
My company's present advertising campaign is over; but there will be other campaigns. I doubt if I will advertise in the four other publications. Sometimes they can't even get the expiration date right. But, if there is to be any future advertising for my company, I want to be sure that The Detroit Sunday Journal is involved.

Why?
Response!
Response!

"Restoration"

By William Hanson
Journal Staff Writer

The London of 1660 was a swinging place. Puritan Oliver Cromwell was out, and the fun-loving monarchy under Charles II was back in. Exciting advances were being made in science, medicine and architecture. Parties were thrown, drinks were drunk, couples were coupling. It wasn't all fun though: plagues, fires and famine took their toll on the happy society.

"Restoration," Michael Hoffman's ambitious new film about the period, mostly succeeds in capturing its spirit. Based on Rose Tremain's novel, Rupert Walters' script centers around a philandering young doctor in Charles II's court, played by Robert Downey Jr. In his service to the king, Downey meets some wise and interesting people who prod him to grow up and appreciate his gift for medicine.

Wonderful sets and costumes, strong supporting roles by David Thewlis and Ian McKellen, and an impressive performance by Downey, make this film a joy to watch. Like London of the 1660s, "Restoration" isn't perfect (the in-over-their-heads Meg Ryan and Hugh Grant come to mind), but it has much to offer. R.

"Richard III" This bold film version of Shakespeare's "Richard III" is set in a fictionalized London of the 1930s. While true to Shakespeare's text, Richard (played masterfully by Ian McKellen) is a black-shirted and ruthless dictator. Co-written by McKellen and director Richard Loncraine, the film gives Shakespeare's story a chilling immediacy as it toys with the notion of a Britain that wasn't able to keep the fascist tide from its shores. A wonderful supporting cast includes Nigel Hawthorne, Maggie Smith and Jim Broadbent. If this must-see "Richard" doesn't bring McKellen an Oscar, it will certainly deliver him the wide American following he deserves. R. — W.H.

"Black Sheep" Funny boys Chris Farley and David Spade provide a few laughs in this mildly amusing slaphappy comedy about a political campaign in Washington state. The lame script runs out of gas early on though and smart-aleck Spade and physical Farley are left to their own devices for too long. PG-13. — W.H.

"The City of Lost Children" This French fantasy about a creep who steals children's dreams is a nightmarish cross of "Oliver Twist" and "Brazil." Weird, but ultimately uplifting. At the Detroit Film Theatre today at 4 p.m. and 7 p.m. R. — W.H.

looked more convincing than Laurence Fishburne makes him look here. Kenneth Branagh's Iago moves like mercury, and this popularization has clarity and vigor. R. — Matt Black

"The Postman" (Il Postino) A welcome return of this wonderful, warm Italian paean to the inspiring powers of romance. It was star Massimo Troisi's final film before he died. PG. — J.G.

"Sabrina" PG.

"Screamers" Unlike the Philip K. Dick-inspired story that is this film's source and his "Blade Runner" and "Total Recall," this one lames out into pokey Old Dark House horror thrills. R. — M.B.

"Two Bits" A well-crafted and touching short story about a Depression-era Philadelphia boy's love for the movies. Stars Al Pacino in an uncharacteristically understated role as the grandfather in this wonderfully nostalgic look at big city neighborhood life. Bring a hankie. PG-13 — W.H.

"The Juror" Demi Moore stars as a single mom chosen to serve on a jury for a mobster's murder trial. Alec Baldwin is the Mafia hitman who tries to intimidate her into voting not guilty. The premise promises a gripping courtroom thriller, but in fact this film delivers more of a stalker flick, with creepy Baldwin falling in twisted love with Moore. This is big-budget Hollywood at its best and worst. The stars are glamorous and the violence is technotops. But there's a superficiality just beneath the slickness. By the time Moore wreaks her inevitable wrath after a very long two hours, the audience is more than ready to go home. R. — John Gallagher

"White Squall" This sea yarn re-creates the 1961 events aboard a sailing school for teenaged boys that ended in tragedy. But director Ridley Scott really has given us two movies. The first tells a sunny coming-of-age tale with first loves, first responsibilities and first glimpses of a wider world. Then disaster strikes with sickening suddenness and the film becomes something else. The line of demarcation between the two halves feels so sharp because Scott has given us no foreshadowing of what's to come; what does feel all wrong, as it must have felt to the real participants. Scott's taut direction turns a bit wobbly in the final courtroom scene; he may have lost his sea legs once back on dry land. Jeff Bridges, impressively strong, leads an able cast as the captain. — J.G.

1811 novel easily contends for best movie of the year. Emma Thompson shines as the heroine beset by genteel poverty and dashed romantic hopes. PG. — J.G.

"Tom and Huck" G.

"12 Monkeys" R.

"Two if by Sea" Sandra Bullock and Denis Leary are repeatedly undermined by a prefab script that turns their every larcenous move into plastic. R. — M.B.

"Waiting to Exhale" Forest Whitaker's direction is seamless and invisible in this juicy adaptation of Terry McMillan's best-seller about four black female friends helping each other through man trouble. R. — M.B.

It takes more than groceries to make a market super

When I was a very small child, growing up in a little rural village surrounded by dairy farms, my town had two grocery stores.

The one on the corner, catty-corner from the old fieldstone depot where my family printed our newspaper, was the one we commonly patronized. It was a tiny market, longer than it was wide, with a broad-planked creaking floor and tall stamped-tin ceilings. The family who owned the store was headed by a ruddy-cheeked butcher; his wife was commonly found at the checkout counter where, every once in a while, she would dole out a piece or two of candy to hopeful little shoppers.

One of those little shoppers was me, quite often. Because going to the store meant crossing only two lightly traveled streets, my mother felt comfortable dispatching me there with some regularity, beginning at what now seems an impossibly young age. Imagine, in these days, sending an unaccompanied 7-year-old off to market, with a brief list and a few dollars clutched in one grimy little mitt.

By the time I was old enough to drive, the butcher and his wife had sold their market and retired. Before long, the new owner built a new store on the village's western limit, a distance just a bit too far to walk home with an armful of groceries. The new market, though bigger than the old one, was still small by today's standards.

My busy mother still sent me to the store whenever she couldn't get away. One weekend, I brought a big-city friend home from college, and together we went to market.

"Robin," called out the owner, as we strolled by the meat counter, "your mother called. She said she forgot to tell you to get dog food."

"Thanks, Frank," I said, thinking nothing of this back-and-forth. But my friend, who grew up in Lafayette Park, was flabbergasted.

"They know you here!" he said, over and over. "They knew you, and they knew your mother, and they remembered to give you the message!"

In the intervening years, I have shopped in big markets and small ones, in cities and in rural villages like the one where I grew up. Very often I have been grateful to have access to good grocery stores, the kind of store that stocked the very things I sought.

Last week, I visited a new supermarket in one of the western suburbs, gigantic, bountifully stocked and brilliantly lit. The produce was enticing, the meats looked lovely, and I saw things on the shelves there that the little market in my hometown would never have carried.

Watching the other customers silently wheeling their buggies up aisle and down, intent on their shopping, I finally understood why my college friend had been so boggled, all those years ago.

In that spotlessly clean, beautiful, brand new market, nobody knows your name.

Something about that makes me very, very sad.

Rich is an R&B force as a performer, too

er. It's abundantly soulful, but rather than traditional R&B, "Words" has an acoustic flavor and also reflects rock influences such as Bruce Springsteen and Tom Petty.

"I don't think anybody can say I want to be safe," Rich says. "It's not your typical R&B; I didn't want it to be. I didn't want to be a clone of someone else's style, and I don't like being categorized. I really don't care what's happening anywhere else; I'm going to go where I think I should go."

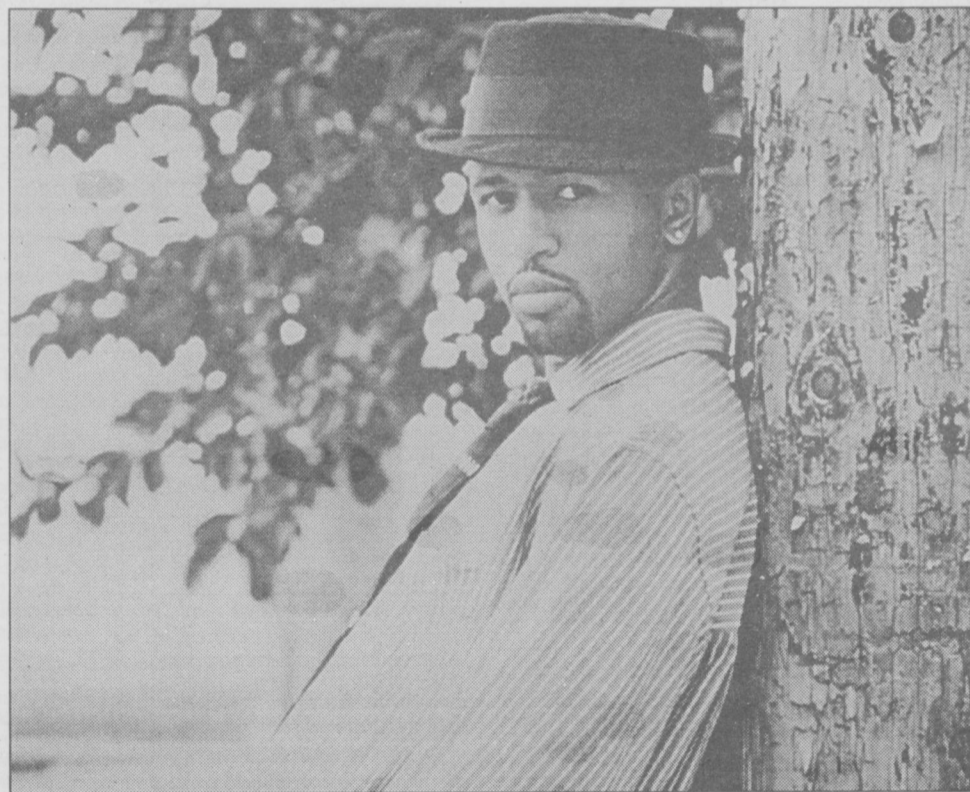

"So far people seem to like it. When you connect with people, you become a lot more confident with what you're doing. Then it doesn't seem like you're so far left."

It's The Time again

The return of The Time — which performs at 7:30 and 10:30 tonight at the Royal Oak Music Theatre (810-546-7610) — is not the Minneapolis funk outfit's first reunion. After practically stealing the show in Prince's 1984 film "Purple Rain," the group broke up. It got back together again during 1990 for another Prince film, "Graffiti Bridge," and recorded another album, "Pandemonium."

But frontman Morris Day says that reunion was motivated by "a big money offer" rather than the musicians' desire to play together again. "The Time has always been famous for our stage performance," Day says. "For us to not go out and tour behind that album was a big injustice."

This time The Time means business, Day says. He's been joined by founding members Jerome Benton, Monte Moir and Jellybean Johnson. Guitarist Jesse Johnson isn't touring but will rejoin the group when it makes an album — which will come after ownership of The Time name is resolved between Prince and Warner Bros. Records. Terry Lewis and Jimmy (Jam) Harris, who have a burgeoning production studio in Minneapolis, have opted out.

Thundering H.O.R.D.E.

Summer seems a long way off, but the H.O.R.D.E. tour is already setting its lineup, according to Blues Traveler guitarist Chan Kinchla. Besides the Traveler, the festival's '96 docket includes the Dave Matthews Band, Lenny Kravitz, Natalie Merchant, Rusted Root and, possibly, Joan Osborne, with more to be added. "The thing about H.O.R.D.E. that's nice is getting a lot of different musical styles," Kinchla says. "Hopefully people come down for one thing and see some other music they've not been exposed to before." In the meantime, you can warm up for the H.O.R.D.E. when Kinchla and Blues Traveler bassist Bobby Sheehan back their good friend and mentor Jono Manson on Monday at the Blind Pig in Ann Arbor. in the country. You can't get this big look doing it in-house."

The set, far smaller than it appears on camera, combines rich blue colors and carpeting with deep woods like honey oak and cherry, coming together around a curved anchor desk that resembles stacked rows of butter-scotch squares. A wall of 32 small color monitors, concealed for some newscasts by large sliding, translucent screens, dominates the back wall, and a three-sided, backlit panel with vivid graphic designs can be rotated to give every camera shot a different background.

"The nice thing about this station is that the management really trusted me," Fiolek-Mandel says. "They said, 'We want to be a little bit unusual, a little bit 'out there,' we want people to look at us.' I said, 'OK,' but my heart was racing when I presented this. And they loved it, because it was unusual."

The initial reaction from anchors and reporters who actually have to use the new set has been enthusiastic, Fiolek-Mandel adds. "Have you noticed they are really perky and alive on camera?" she asks.

"Diana (Lewis) and I were both saying that you kind of draw energy from it, because it is so bright and looks so good," says news anchor Guy Gordon.

Now let's see if the ratings notice.

THE 38TH DETROIT BOAT SHOW

Dealers have a boat load of hopes

By Bill Halls
Journal Staff Writer

New models, better interest rates and a boat-hungry public have manufacturers and dealers optimistic about the 38th Detroit Boat Show, now through Feb. 11 at Cobo Center.

"There are a lot of entry-level investment opportunities for consumers, particularly for jet boats and personal watercraft," said Van Snider, president of the Michigan Boating Industries Association. "We feel - and hate this phrase - there is a pent-up demand among people who have postponed purchasing boats."

"Interest rates are going down. Fuel isn't cheap but costs are not astronomical and sales have risen ever since 1994."

Snider, who expects attendance to be around 125,000 - up from 117,000 last year - said the economy is not hot enough for a super sales year but he predicts "solid, continual growth" for the nation's leader in boat registrations. Michigan had close to 900,000 registrations recorded in 1994 (the most recent figures available).

The show will feature 1,000 boats and products from 250 dealers and businesses. Financing, insurance, slip rental, brokerage, vacation planning, charter trips, maintenance and other services will be available at the One Stop Shopping arcade.

There will be special exhibits on antique and classic boats, fishing, sailing, water-skiing and boating seminars. A sailing simulator will be used to show nonsailors how relatively easy it is to learn to sail, and a sailing seminar will include discussions of state-of-the-art techniques in modifying deck layouts for easier sailing, racing techniques, trimming sails for maximum performance and modern technology.

Among new products on display will be a 13-foot electric runabout manufactured by Leisure Life Limited of Grand Rapids. Powered by a 24-volt battery, the boat runs quietly at 5-6

BOAT SHOW FACTS

■ What: 38th annual Detroit Boat Show, sponsored by the Michigan Boating Industries Association.

■ When: Now through Feb. 11 at Cobo Center.

■ Features: More than 250 boat dealers and marine businesses displaying some 1,000 boats and new state-of-the-art technology. Includes everything from paddleboats to racing yachts, power cruisers and personal watercraft.

■ Special attractions: Antique and classic boats, sailing seminars, fishing, water skiing and contests.

■ One-stop shopping: On-site financing, insurance, slip rental, brokerage, vacation planning, charter trips and maintenance.

■ Hours: 3-11 p.m. Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, Friday; noon-10 Saturday and Wednesday; noon-8 Sunday.

■ Admission: Adults, $7; children under 12 free when accompanied by an adult. Seniors over 62 admitted free on Tuesday.

knots and is designed for inland lakes that prohibit gasoline-powered boats.

Sun Seeker is offering two new Super Hawk models capable of 60 knots. The cruisers, built in England, include 48- and 51-foot models. Four Winds, another Michigan-based manufacturer, is planning to re-enter the performance market with a pair of unlimited models. The low-slung boats are 17 and 19 feet and feature dual props on some models that "take off on command."

THE 38TH DETROIT BOAT SHOW

Personal watercraft hottest things on water

By Wylie Gerdes
Journal Staff Writer

Not many summers ago, personal watercraft were a novelty, a curiosity for the jaded who had worn out the thrill of every other water toy. Even the name, personal watercraft, hadn't surfaced: the wee beasts were known by the trademark of the first widespread brand, JetSki.

Personal watercraft are far beyond the toy stage. In no other category of craft will the Detroit Boat Show have as wide a selection, as wide a choice in color and designs, as big a serving of pure pizzazz. Personal watercraft are where the action is.

"Explosive, in a word." That's how Dave Pilvelait, spokesman for Boat/U.S., a national recreational boating group, describes the growth of personal watercraft. There are about 900,000 personal watercraft on the water, Pilvelait said, and 200,000 of them were sold last year. Sales were up more than 40 percent, and personal watercraft accounted for about one-fifth of all new boats sold.

The demand seems insatiable, and it's easy to understand. Personal watercraft are relatively cheap compared to traditional boats, much easier to transport and store, just as fast and just as fun. About the only drawbacks are that you can't take a whole crowd for a ride at the same time, and that the rider gets soaked. In cold water areas, like the Great Lakes and many of Michigan's inland lakes, riders need a wetsuit most of the summer.

On a thrill per buck basis, personal watercraft are hard to beat. According to Boat/U.S., the average personal watercraft sells for about $5,700. For that, you can get a 50 m.p.h. ride, and an honest 50 m.p.h. costs at least $20,000 in a runabout.

For many on the shore, however, personal watercraft are not particularly thrilling. Lakefront residents complain about the noise.

And personal watercraft have gotten a reputation for trouble. Two-thirds of all vessels involved in accidents reported to the U.S. Coast Guard in 1994 were open motorboats and personal watercraft.

Many accidents can be chalked up to inexperience; often a personal watercraft is the rider's first boat. Movements are under way in most parts of the country for various licensing and education schemes, Pilvelait said.

"People have been buying personal watercraft so fast that a lot of us concerned with safety issues have been

Pilvelait compared personal watercraft safety to snowmobiling, where the sport's initial growth also spawned new controls.

The comparison with snowmobiling is apt. Most major builders of personal watercraft skipped over from making snowmobiles, rather than from traditional boat building. That includes Polaris and Sea-Doo, who make critically acclaimed personal watercraft lines. Personal watercraft are marketed like snowmobiles, too, targeted for the young and restless rather than notoriously conservative traditional boat buyers.

Kawasaki, who popularized the original JetSki, continues to dominate the "stand up" personal watercraft, but builders have segmented their sit-down lines into numerous niches. Builders make two-person runabouts and family cruisers, and even three-person craft that look like tankers when compared to sport rides.

Pilvelait for one doesn't see an end to the boom. He bought a Sea-Doo last summer to go, along with a 20-foot runabout and a 25-foot sailboat he keeps on the Potomac in northern Virginia, where he lives.

"There's plenty of room on the water," he said.

Spending a boat load

Michigan boaters spend big to enjoy their summer fun on the water. They sank over $300 million into their recreation in 1994. Florida is the only state where more is spent on boat-related purchases.

THE 38TH DETROIT BOAT SHOW

Winds and weeds will be on boaters' minds

By Gene Schabath
Sunday Journal Writer

Boaters and residents on Lake St. Clair will be keeping their eyes on the wind direction this summer, and it won't be just for nautical reasons.

Winds from the wrong direction could cause serious problems with aquatic weeds, both in the water and onshore.

That's what happened in the summer of 1994 when strong east and southeast winds dislodged huge forests of smelly seaweed that clogged boat propellers, washed ashore in gobs and kept many lakeside residents indoors most of the season.

The weed problem wasn't nearly as bad last year. But the weeds are still there, and communities along Lake St. Clair are ready for what could be the Invasion of the Weeds II.

The Michigan Department of Environmental Quality gave both Harrison Township and St. Clair Shores huge amphibious weed harvesters to tackle any weed bogs.

Harrison supervisor Pam Weeks said her community had fewer problems last year because the harvesters removed tens of thousands of cubic yards of weeds from offshore waters.

Weeks said the weeds not only caused health problems on the shore, they posed safety problems in the water. Boaters risked drowning in a tangle of weeds if they fell overboard. And at least one boating fatality was linked to them.

"One guy was out there in the lake in one of those new ski boats and his engine had sucked in so many weeds that his engine burned out," Weeks said. "While he was sitting in the dark waiting for help, someone else (in another boat) came over the top of him and killed him."

The main culprits in the huge weed growth are zebra mussels and discharges of nutrients from rainwater and other sources. Satellite photos taken from 1985 to 1995 show that zebra mussels purified the water from the late 1980s on. This allowed sunlight to reach the lake's bottom and accelerated the weed growth. The zebra mussels were accidentally released into Lake St. Clair in the mid-1980's from the ballast water of a passing overseas freighter.

"It appears the aquatic plants increased in abundance in 1990 and have been widespread ever since," said Eugene Jaworski, a scientist heading up a U.S. Army Corps of Engineers study of the weed problem in Lake St. Clair.

Jaworski said harvesters are effective for temporarily controlling weeds, but they won't do much to change their density over the long haul. His study and other research may yield some answers. But until then, boaters can only keep an eye on the wind.

"There's no doubt that weeds have been more abundant than they have been, so being prepared is a good idea," Jaworski said.

Old watercraft contrast with the new

By Bill Halls
Journal Staff Writer

People love to look at the new boats, and dealers love the fact that 40 percent of their annual sales are generated each year by the Detroit Boat Show, which runs through Feb. 11 at Cobo Hall.

However, one of the major attractions each year is the antique and classic boats display.

"It's always a popular attraction," said Van Snider, president of the Michigan Boating Industry

Association. "They are striking in their own accord and have an incredible contrast to the new boats."

Here are a few of the classics that will be on display.

■ "Lil Miss Pepsi" – Owned by Morin Classic Boat on Torch Lake, Don Morin built this 20-foot replica of the 1950 "Miss Pepsi" unlimited hydroplane last year. The original, on display at the Dossin Great Lakes Museum on Belle Isle, was one of 55 hydroplanes Morin built with Les Staudacher in Kawkawlin. Designed by John Hacker, the original Miss Pepsi was the last all-mahogany model and remains their favorite.

■ "Lil" – This 21-foot boat is 100 percent original with hardware, oars, engine and wood. The engine is a Silent Dis-pro made by the Disappearing Propeller Co.

■ "Pesce" – This 1937 utility boat was built in by Gar Wood. Owner Patrick Fisher took four years to restore this six-cylinder model with the expert advice of Conan Fisher, Paul Fisher and the staff of Culberson Boat Works.

Toronto turns new leaf, boosts playoff chances

Most observers don't consider the Toronto Maple Leafs serious Stanley Cup contenders this season. The popular opinion is that either the Red Wings or the Colorado Avalanche will represent the Western Conference in the Cup Finals. Even the Chicago Blackhawks were rated higher than the Leafs.

The Maple Leafs made two trades over the past two weeks that could dramatically change that scenario. The first was the three-team, seven-player deal that netted them veteran left wing/center Kirk Muller and veteran backup goaltender Don Beaupre for backup goalie Damian Rhodes and young tough farmhand Ken Belanger. Toronto then traded center Benoit Hogue and left wing Randy Wood to the Dallas for center Dave Gagner and a sixth-round choice.

The deals give Toronto two strong offensive lines.

"They've definitely got six top forwards," said the Red Wings Darren McCarty. "Those top two lines are very lethal, no matter who's on the ice."

Under Pat Burns, the Leafs advanced to the conference semifinals in 1993 and 1994, but a lack of offense was their undoing.

In 1992-93, the team had to rely on center Doug Gilmour and left wing Dave Andreychuk for most of its offense.

In 1993-94, right wing Mike Gartner (the fifth-leading goal scorer in NHL history) was acquired from the New York Rangers late in the season. Wendel Clark was traded to the

PAUL HARRIS

Quebec Nordiques (now Avalanche). The key player Toronto got in return was center-right wing Mats Sundin.

But the lockout-shortened 1995 season was disappointing for Toronto, which was eliminated by the Blackhawks in the first round of the playoffs. This season it seemed like more of the same. The team would continue to struggle for goals while the outstanding goaltending of Felix Potvin and the steady defensive defensemen like Jamie Macoun, Dave Ellett and Todd Gill would continue to make it tough for the other team to score goals. Toronto also signed veteran defenseman Larry Murphy, the fourth-leading career scoring defenseman, during the offseason.

But after the latest trades, the Leafs boast a top line of Gilmour at center with Muller on left wing and Andreychuk on right wing. Gagner, a consistent 30-goal scorer, centers the second line between Sundin on left wing and Gartner on the right side.

The Maple Leafs knew they had to improve their offense to compete better with the Red Wings and Avalanche, who both have a surplus of offensive talent at forward. While the moves aren't likely to get Toronto into the Stanley Cup Finals, it makes the Leafs a dangerous team capable of upsetting either Detroit, Colorado or Chicago in a seven-game playoff series.

If Toronto is ever going to make another run at the Cup, it has to be this year. That's because 11 players will be 30 or older before the season ends. That list includes Gilmour and Andreychuk (both 32), Gartner (36), Murphy (34), Muller (30), Gagner (31), Macoun (34), Ellett (31) and Gill (30).

"It (the latest deals) puts us in a league with Detroit, but not quite as good," said Bill Watters, the Leafs' assistant general manager. "If you're going to advance in the Western Conference, you have to get close to Detroit and Colorado."

Burns says it could be a matter of luck.

"In today's hockey, the Stanley Cup, it's a situation where you have 10 lottery tickets," Burns said. "You have to buy one to have a chance. But anybody with a ticket can win it."

The Leafs have their fingers crossed.

Lions might be next franchise to campaign for a downtown stadium

back named Scott Mitchell for $11 million. Dishing out the cash is easy. Pontiac, arguing in court that by depriving it of an NFL franchise, the Lions owe many times more than $30 million, now there's a toughie.

(2.) Getting voters to approve a new tax for another new stadium could be sticky, and maybe it's ridiculous. Especially when that stadium is to be built for a wealthy owner who 21 years ago bolted town for a deal he now doesn't like.

But maybe it's not so outrageous. See how many citizens respond to a "Bring Back the Lions" bugle call. A lot, we'd guess. See how many taxpayers like the idea of a Tourist Tax falling heavily on the nonresident, expense-account gang.

But then see how much noise the restaurant lobby would make over having to bump checks even 1 percent. Remember, when the Tourist Tax authorization was approved in 1991, Michigan had a 4 percent sales tax. It's now 6 percent. No restaurateur with an empty table is interested in any increases there — and neither likely are a lot of consumers.

Another area of potential grief is financing the remainder of a new stadium, since a Tourist Tax probably would cover about half the $250 million in necessary bonds. Bill Ford is not going to pull a Mike Ilitch here and cough up $150 million.

Does the term "Permanent Seat License" ring a bell?

It will if a new stadium project actually gets going. Season-ticket holders might then squawk a bit if retaining their seats means plopping down a few grand just to have the right to buy tickets for them.

Could be some opposition there.

Then again, how much is a community willing to pay for the pleasure of having an NFL team within its arms? We've seen the answer, here and in cities across America. Fans will pay tons, especially if there's a fear ownership might back off its loyalties and do what Art Modell did in Cleveland.

Would the Fords do that to Metro Detroit, even if negotiations with Pontiac remain thorny? Probably not. But neither may taxpayers grumble about returning a team to downtown Detroit, in proximity to a new baseball stadium and to surrounding development, at the behest of a likable mayor who is trying to make things work in a city that needs all the help and commitment it can get.

Neither may they mind the idea of seeing an NFL game at a new and more intimate facility than the Silverdome, at a place where they can walk to bars and restaurants in the vicinity and feel once again as if football and community are reconnected. Compare that to traveling to the Silverdome, where about the only interaction fans feel with their environment is on I-75 or within the Silverdome parking lot.

Or is all of this going to be made irrelevant when the Lions ultimately get the deal they want from Pontiac — something that enables them to be fairly compensated for parking, concessions, luxury suites, etc.? What they are realizing now is a joke within the NFL, and fixing it is justice.

Lou Beer, the lawyer representing Pontiac in negotiations, was reached Friday in Puerto Vallarta, Mexico, where he was attending — perhaps painlessly — an American Bar Association meeting. Beer insists quite persuasively that the new package being offered the Lions is an NFL club's dream.

The Lions don't agree. They want a new deal. In a new stadium. In Detroit.

Keep your eye on next month's baseball stadium vote. It may not be the last such issue Detroit voters may face in '96, the year the city and two pro sports franchises will have decided how much love they really share.

Spartans' Brooks improves on, off basketball court

court, more is expected from him each game. He's not exactly a go-to guy, but he is the player MSU coach Tom Izzo depends on in certain situations. In a 68-54 victory at Minnesota on Jan. 27, Brooks scored 17 of his 19 points in the second half. Against Penn State, Brooks had 15 of his 19 in the second half.

"Throughout his career, it was up one game and down the next," Izzo said. "This year, he has become more consistent, and I think he's more at peace with himself. If you look at him, he's more focused on the court. He's working hard at everything he's doing. I think he just needed to find himself, to feel good about himself and feel confident about himself."

Because Brooks has elevated his game, so have the Spartans, who have rebounded from a 6-6 start, which included home losses to Detroit Mercy and Central Michigan.

"We had a horrible preseason," Brooks said. "A lot of people were down on us and we weren't confident going into the Big Ten. But we beat Indiana and Illinois and that helped to build our confidence back up."

Brooks was considered a defensive liability during his first three seasons, but Izzo now considers him one of the team's better defenders.

"It's gotten to the point where we play him at the top of the zone whereas we used to hide him on the bottom before," Izzo said. "He can cover a lot of different people. Even when we go man-to-man, we're not afraid to put him on the best player. He has long arms and, when he's focused, he can do a lot of things."

Brooks has also cut down on his turnovers. He had a tendency to dribble into crowds but he is now beginning to recognize opposing defensive schemes.

"Last year, he had five or six turnovers a game, and if he didn't turn it over, it was almost a turnover," Izzo said. Now, you see it once or twice. We talk about the turnovers, but you've got to give him some leeway. We work on his ball-handling everyday in practice because that's something that will help him if he plans on playing somewhere after he leaves here."

On Brooks' chances of going to the next level, Izzo said: "He's gotten some letters (from NBA teams), but different teams want different things. It's hard to tell with Quinton. He's a great athlete and I'd like to see him get a chance somewhere."

"It's a joy to see a kid continue to improve. He raised his grades, then his attitude goes up and his game goes up. It's like, man, this is what it's all about."

SUNDAY

Noon Skiing, Downhill Relays, Channel 62. Taped, made-for-TV event — Why bother?

1 p.m. NBA, New York at Indiana, Channel 4. The cliché is true: These teams really don't like each other.

1 p.m. College basketball, Alabama at Syracuse, Channel 62. Not unless you're a fan of Syracuse's Todd Burgen, a former Detroit Pershing star.

1:30 p.m. College basketball, Massachusetts at Xavier, Channel 7. Another chance to see the nation's No. 1.

3 p.m. Golf, Pebble Beach National Pro-Am, final round, Channel 62. Celebrity watching is over. Time for serious golf.

3:30 p.m. NBA, San Antonio at Orlando, Channel 4. Mr. Robinson vs. Mr. Shaq.

3:45 p.m. College basketball, Marquette at Tulane, Channel 7. Nothing to build your Sunday schedule around.

4:30 p.m. College basketball, South Florida at Cincinnati, PASS. The Bearcats are worth watching in this mismatch.

5:30 p.m. Golf, Royal Caribbean Classic, final round, ESPN. Swinging seniors.

6 p.m. NFL, Pro Bowl, Channel 7. The worst of the all-star games.

8 p.m. NHL, Chicago at Anaheim, ESPN. Check out two-goal all-star Paul Kariya.

9 p.m. NBA, Chicago at Denver, WGN. The Bulls continue their assault on the league.

MONDAY

7:30 p.m. College basketball, Georgetown at Villanova, ESPN. Nova's Kerry Kittles and the Hoyas' Allen Iverson face off.

7:30 p.m. NBA, Detroit at New York, PASS. Grant Hill hits the Big Apple. Can a Letterman gig be far behind?

9:30 p.m. College basketball, Oklahoma State at Oklahoma, ESPN. Watch the musical instead.

TUESDAY

7:30 p.m. College basketball, Indiana at Minnesota, ESPN. This is a typical Big Ten matchup — mediocre at best.

7:30 p.m. NHL, Florida at Detroit, PASS. Ex-Wings assistant Doug MacLean returns for the first time as Panthers coach.

8 p.m. NBA, Chicago at Phoenix, TNT. Marquee game has lost some luster since the Suns have set in the West.

9:30 p.m. College basketball, Arkansas at Mississippi State, ESPN. Two highly-regarded teams who haven't performed.

WEDNESDAY

7 p.m. College basketball, Duke at Georgia Tech, ESPN. Tech's Stephon Marbury looks like he's the real thing.

8 p.m. NBA, Orlando at Detroit, Channel 50. Shaq and Penny play the Palace.

8 p.m. College basketball, Ohio State at Michigan State, PASS. The surprising Spartans should pick up a victory.

9 p.m. College basketball, Seton Hall at Rutgers, ESPN. The battle for New Jersey.

10:30 p.m. NBA, New Jersey at L.A. Lakers, TBS. Another chance to see Magic.

THURSDAY

4 p.m. Golf, Buick Invitational, first round, ESPN. The first of 500 tour events this season with a Buick tie-in.

7:30 p.m. NHL, Detroit at Florida, Channel 50. There are worse times in the schedule to be in Miami.

7:30 p.m. College basketball, Illinois at Penn State, ESPN. A role-reversal game. Illinois figured to be a contender early and Penn State was an also-ran.

7:30 p.m. College basketball, St. Joseph's at Temple, PASS. A nice game if you're in Philadelphia.

9:30 p.m. College basketball, Tulane at Louisville, ESPN. Old rivals — no big deal.

10:30 p.m. College basketball, UCLA at California, PASS. Bears and Bruins. Oh, my.

FRIDAY

2 p.m. Golf, Naples Challenge, first round, ESPN. This week's seniors stop.

4 p.m. Golf, Buick Invitational, second round, ESPN. This beats the tournament's former name, the Andy Williams Shearson Lehman Brothers San Diego Open.

9:30 p.m. Boxing, Oscar de la Hoya vs. Darryl Tyson, HBO. One of boxing's brightest stars moves up to junior welterweight.

SATURDAY

Noon College basketball, Michigan at Purdue, Channel 7. It's never easy for the Wolverines to win at Assembly Hall.

Noon College basketball, Virginia Tech at Xavier, ESPN. Hokies are one of the nation's best teams, and Ace Custis is a player fans should know about.

couch potato time

Noon College basketball, Drake at Evansville, PASS. Pass is the operative word.

2 p.m. College basketball, Ohio State at Wisconsin, Channel 7. You'll see red.

2 p.m. College basketball, Georgetown at Syracuse, Channel 62. Good teams, good game.

2 p.m. College basketball, Wright State at Loyola of Chicago, PASS. Why?

3 p.m. NHL, Detroit at Tampa Bay, Channel 2. For die-hard Wings fans only.

3 p.m. College basketball, Texas-El Paso at New Mexico, ESPN. Is this really necessary?

3:30 p.m. Golf, Buick Invitational, third round, Channel 4. More guys in pullover sweaters and loud pants.

4 p.m. College basketball, Mississippi State at Oklahoma, Channel 62. An intersectional match that interests nobody.

4:30 p.m. College basketball, Central Michigan at Eastern Michigan, PASS. The Eagles are running away with the MAC title.

6 p.m. Golf, Naples Challenge, second round,

ESPN. More seniors in pullover sweaters, loud pants and golf carts.

7 p.m. NBA, All-Star Saturday, TNT. The slam dunk and three-point shooting contests, along with the rookie all-star game.

7:30 p.m. NHL, Buffalo at Toronto, Channel 9. More of a regional rivalry than you think.

8 p.m. College basketball, Michigan State at Penn State, Channel 20. A key Big Ten battle.

8 p.m. College basketball, Minnesota at Northwestern, PASS. A few weeks ago, this looked like a nothing game. It still does.

9:30 p.m. Auto racing, 24 Hours of Daytona, ESPN. The first major event of SpeedWeek.

9:30 p.m. Boxing, Felix Trinidad vs. Rodney Moore, Showtime. Trinidad defends his IBF welterweight title.

10:30 p.m. NHL, Washington at Vancouver, Channel 9. Don't stick around for this.

10:30 p.m. College basketball, Oregon State at Washington, PASS. It's past your bedtime, don't bother.

Balancing ACT

MSU's Brooks elevates effort — on and off the court

By Terry Cabell
Journal Sports Writer

EAST LANSING — The potential, the untapped talent, always has been apparent. But Michigan State forward Quinton Brooks has been an enigma.

During his first three seasons, Brooks played in spurts. He would play superbly in one game, and disappear for the next two or three.

This season, the 6-foot-7 senior is MSU's most consistent player, and he has established himself as one of the best players in the Big Ten.

Brooks uses three words — experience, maturity, confidence — to explain the turnaround.

"I worked hard on my game all summer, trying to get stronger and doing things I wasn't too good at, like going to the basket," said Brooks, who took averages of 17.8 points and six rebounds into Saturday's critical Big Ten clash at Purdue.

"I could always score from underneath the basket if I got the ball in the post, but I wasn't too good at driving to the hole if they cut that off. But now I've added other options to my game.

"If you're scoring a lot, your confidence goes up. Plus, we're winning now so our team confidence has gone up and that helps me out a lot."

Brooks also boasted the best shooting percentage (57 percent) in the Big Ten before meeting Purdue, which along with MSU and Penn State, shared the conference lead.

The court is not the only place Brooks has shown improvement. He suffers from attention deficit disorder and has struggled in the classroom. Last semester, however, he posted a 2.8 grade point average — his best at MSU — and is scheduled to graduate in May with a degree in criminal justice.

"My freshman and sophomore year, I had a hard time balancing basketball and school," Brooks said. "Sometimes I would come in from practice and say, 'I'm tired; I'm going to sleep,' instead of disciplining myself, reading a chapter and going to sleep. But I've got the mind set now that this is my last go-round, and I'm going to do what I've got to do to get it done.

"My grade point last semester wasn't the greatest, but it was better than I've been getting. It proved if I work hard, I could get something done."

As for Brooks' improvement on the MSU's Quinton Brooks (40) is reaching another level, improving as a player and student.

If Tigers score, downtown Lions stadium might follow

Next month's vote on funding a new Tiger Stadium is also shaping up, interestingly, as a vote on whether the Lions might return to downtown Detroit.

If the city's taxpayers say yes to using $40 million in revenue for a new ballpark, watch momentum build toward welcoming back the Lions to downtown. Sources close to the Lions and Mayor Dennis Archer say it could bring on another 1996 ballot proposal, this one geared to financing a new football stadium.

In fact, the football stadium tax is all in place. It has been sitting there for five years, waiting for a go-ahead from Wayne County officials and voters. Originally authorized by the Michigan legislature to help finance a new ballpark, it would now go to a stadium for the Lions, allowing Wayne County to stick a Tourist Tax on rental cars (2 percent) as well as on hotel and motel rooms and restaurants (1 percent).

Just like that, you have the bulk of the $250 million football stadium financed. Just like that, the Lions and Mayor Archer are closer to giving each other a major bear hug.

It all sounds fairly dreamy, except Archer and the Ford family are working hard toward that very end. Each wants the Lions back in Detroit. They also have ammo galore in their favor. A couple of realities however enter into the picture:

(1.) There is this matter of the Lions and their Silverdome lease running through 2004. Lease, schmease, say the Lions. They argue the lease has been broken plenty of times by the Silverdome, not the least of which occurred when the Michigan Panthers of the immortal United States Football League played there in 1983-84.

So what if the Lions owe $20 to $30 million in lease obligations to Pontiac?

Is this anything that can't be bought out when two years ago the Lions signed a tenderfoot quarter-
